What it is...

Security Update 2017-002 for Apple Mac OS will be distributed to Apple Mac workstations on July 27, 2017, so that the machines remain compliant with Department security requirements. Impact upon you…

The 2017-002 patch will install in the background and when finished, end users will be then be prompted for a reboot within 8 hours. The update will also be advertised in the Self Service app, so if a user wishes to run it themselves before prompted, they can.

The update to the OneDrive Client is part of the Microsoft OneDrive project. No reboot is required. The OneDrive app will be added to the Self Service app also. New users will need to follow the existing OneDrive setup in the HYPERLINK "https://connected.ed.gov/educate/Documents/OneDrive%20Business%20Job%20Aid%20for%20Mac.docx" OneDrive for Business Job Aid for Macs.

Come celebrate the accomplishments of your colleague Ollie Cantos as he is inducted into the National Disability Mentoring Hall of Fame!

The National Disability Mentoring Coalition recently announced that 25 individuals and four organizations will be inducted into the Susan M. Daniels Disability Mentoring Hall of Fame in August 2017. The honorees — nominated by their mentees — were selected based on their dedication to mentoring and their impact on the lives of youths and adults with disabilities. Those selected represent a wide range of backgrounds and mentoring styles in national and regional programs across the country.

Among the nominees is Ollie Cantos, special assistant in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education. Ollie's work in promoting disability rights as part of civil rights is nationally lauded, but less well known is his personal role as a caring and motivating mentor. Unique among Hall of Fame honorees, Ollie was nominated by one of his sons, Leo Cantos. For several years, Ollie mentored triplets in Washington, D.C.—like him, they are blind—and then took the ultimate step by adopting all three. For Ollie, there are no boundaries between his professional goals and his family values. Ollie will be inducted at ED by Rayna Aylward, formerly of ED and now co-chair of the National Disability Mentoring Coalition PolicyWorks, Inc.

The event will be held Thursday Aug. 24 at 11 a.m. in room 5C100 of the LBJ building. The event should last approximately one hour. Please note that both Secretary DeVos and Acting Assistant Secretary for the Office of Civil Rights Candice Jackson have been invited to offer remarks at the event as well. Please feel free to come with your own thoughts about Ollie to share.

Read more about Ollie's remarkable story on the Department's HYPERLINK "https://connected.ed.gov/InsideED/Lists/Posts/Pos t.aspx?ID=220" InsideED news blog. The Disability Mentoring Hall of Fame has posted its own article on Ollie; check it out HYPERLINK "https://www.pyd.org/blog/general/ollie-cantos-inducted-disability-mentoring-hall-of-fame/" here.

Subject Town Hall Meeting - Dwight D. Eisenhower Memorial
Location Barnard Auditorium - LBJ
Show Time As Tentative

The Dwight D. Eisenhower Memorial Commission and the General Services Administration will be the Department of Education's guests on Thursday, September 14 at 2 p.m. to provide an update on the Eisenhower Memorial (Memorial).

For those who are not familiar with the planning for the Memorial, the selected site includes the plaza area in front of the Department of Education Building. Construction of the Memorial, designed by noted architect Frank Gehry, is expected to kick off this fall. Come to the Town Hall Meeting and learn more about this important project, and about the impacts and benefits to the Department of Education that it will bring. There will be an opportunity to ask questions at the end of the presentation.

This event will also be broadcast live on Mediasite and EDstream at the following links: HYPERLINK "http://mediasite.ed.gov/Mediasite/Play/4aab3cfa4e

Dear Colleagues,

Please join me on Thursday, November 16, from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m. (Eastern Time), in Barnard Auditorium for an All Staff meeting and the official kick-off of this year's Combined Federal Campaign (CFC).

This meeting will encourage you to "Show Some Love" and seek out charitable causes that you may identify with and can support as the holiday season approaches. This will also be a good opportunity to meet and hear updates from our new senior staff members throughout the Department.

I look forward to seeing many of you there.

Thanks,
Betsy

Subject PoliticoPro and Legislative Compass Presentation

Location Library - BE-101

Show Time As Tentative

Dave Gelsomino, our representative from PoliticoPro, will be in the library on December 22 at 1:00pm to talk about a new product -- the Legislative Compass, which is a tool for tracking and analyzing legislation at the federal and state level.

Features include:
Keyword alerts and bill tracking
Editorial bill analysis and real-time updates
Comparing different versions of a bill using track changes
Identifying the origin of bill sections and the roll up of smaller bills into larger bills
Note taking and sharing Organizational tools

The Compass is a part of POLITICO Pro, but would come at an additional cost. Each office transfers funds to IES to pay for PoliticoPro, so each office can decide whether Legislative Compass would be a useful addition, or not.

Please let me know if you plan to attend.

Good morning White House Liaisons,

As part of the administration's continued effort to expand our collective network and share the news about progress made thus far, we will participate as part of the Heritage Foundation's Job Seeker series. The event will begin with a short briefing/ panel (PPO, OPA, a White House Liaison) followed by an hour of networking. Heritage anticipates approximately 200 job seekers will attend. We are requesting that at least one representative (in an official capacity) attend from each of the Departments.

Sorry for the short suspense, but it would be great if you could share the name(s) / titles(s) with me by 3pm today of who is available to participate.

We realize this is outside of normal working hours and appreciate your support.

Date: Tuesday, April 10th
Location: Heritage - Allison Auditorium and Foyer
Time: 6:00 PM - 7:45 PM
Format: 40 minute briefing/panel followed by an hour of networking

White House Liaison Teams,

We have over 200 registered attendees for the job fair so far, and we anticipate more to register over the next week!

Thank you to everyone who has RSVP'd for a table to represent their agencies at the job fair so far. The job fair is from 2:00 – 5:00 p.m., so plan to arrive to Senate Hearing Room G-50 by 1:45 p.m. at the latest. If you haven't RSVP'd for a table yet, there is still time!

Just a reminder that CPI is handling all logistics and signage for this event. PPO & CPI just need all of your help to join us in meeting the job seekers. We encourage you all to bring any informational resources that will help job seekers understand what it is like to work at your agency.

For those of you who have smaller agencies and might not have many political openings at the moment, you are still encouraged to attend the event to network.

Please feel free to reach out to Matt Buckham (b)(6) r me (b)(6) with any questions, thoughts or concerns.

Thanks,

Courtney & Matt

I think it's a good idea. What about sometime mid-afternoon? It looks like Steve has some availability between 230 and 330 and 4pm on. I'm generally free after 1245. Do you just want to set up a meeting?

Hi Justin,

Natasha and I were talking and I think it makes sense if the OGC folks sat down together with yourself and Steven Menashi to hash out the legal issues raised here. What are your thoughts? Would you have time tomorrow or Monday?

I think the OGC folks may also want to huddle to discuss the legal issues further. I'll send a separate email to set something up, before we meet again with the group.

I am attaching for everyone's reference the updated chart that Dan and Brian sent last Friday – there are some other FOIAs that have come in since then so this chart doesn't reflect those.

Hopefully, this time works for everyone on Monday.

Golden Apple Awards Ceremony -- Golden Apple or (b)(5)
Reminder: Please join your colleagues for the Golden Apple Awards happening now!

Please join us for the next edition of the Golden Apple Awards Ceremony on Wednesday, July 19th at 2:30pm.

The ARB is seeking nominations for the Golden Apple Awards for April 1st through June 30th, 2017. The deadline to submit nominations is 6pm EST July 14th, 2017. All OGC employees may submit nominations and all OGC employees are eligible to receive a Golden Apple Award. The Golden Apple Award recognizes a variety of contributions, including:

- Successfully completing a large or complex assignment;
- Winning a significant case for the Department;
- Completing a special project or solving a thorny problem;
- A special contribution to the morale or quality of life in OGC or ED; or
- Displaying a positive attitude in the face of mounting responsibilities.

This list is not exhaustive. Any instance of an OGC employee going above and beyond his or her normal day-to-day duties or performing those duties exceptionally well is a reason to nominate a colleague for a Golden Apple Award. Please take this opportunity to nominate a colleague for an ARB award. To nominate someone, please send Kristina Spencer or John Petralia an email explaining in detail why the nominee deserves to be recognized. The ARB will review all submissions and choose one or two nominations that best exemplify the spirit of the Golden Apple Award.

Thank you!

- Brandon Sherman, Special Assistant and Senior Counsel to the Acting Assistant Secretary, OCR who has worked on many key education issues in his career in ED and in private practice

Special thanks to Attorney Dan Greenspahn from OCR's Program Legal Group (PLG) whose thoughts led to the framework for this session. ABOUT OCR ACADEMY and OGC's COFFEE TALK SERIES

Established on July 18, 2014 with its first session on August 6, 2014, OCR Academy is designed to promote learning and opportunities for interaction among all staff in all OCR offices and units. The Coffee Talk series in OGC was developed a couple of years ago by OGC's Workforce Improvement Team to expand OGC's staff knowledge on key aspects of sensitive legal and policy issues being handled in parts of OGC and ED.

Staff are reminded that, when asking questions about specific scenarios, they may by all means make inquiries based on theoretical examples but must take significant care not to include personally identifiable information (PII).

OCR Academy sessions are voluntary and are informal in nature. These sessions are intended to provide exposure to a broad array of perspectives and do not necessarily represent OCR, ED policy, or enforcement practices. Feel free to email Ollie Cantos (Ollie.Cantos@ED.gov) with any suggestions for future sessions. Please entitle your email "OCR Academy – Idea" when sending. We would specifically be interested to learn:

- What additional topics do you wish to see addressed and why?
- Who should deliver a session on that topic?
- What questions do you anticipate OCR staff would have for the prospective speaker(s) whose answers could further support staff's daily work?

Thank you, and talk to you soon!

Kathleen-

In a meeting with House Education and Workforce staff, Emmanual Guillory and Emily Slack, they suggested that it might be best to reach out to Bob Eitel at the Department on this issue. I am happy to email him directly but wanted to confirm with you before making that contact.

Thanks,
Kristina

Subject: RE: Third Party Service Inquiry- Meeting Request

Kathleen-

Thanks for your response.

We were looking to meet with D.C. policy staff to discuss the Obama Administration's guidance on the Third Party Servicer regulations at 34 CFR 668.2, 668.23 and 668.25. Specifically, in our opinion there is ambiguity in both the guidance and the Department's enforcement of that guidance in some instances that poses a threat to the business of some quality third party servicers. We believe it would be helpful to brief the Department on the issues that we have encountered in the event that a guidance clarification can be issued in the future for the benefit of the servicers and schools, as well as Department staff implementing the rule.

One particular situation that exemplifies this problem is a third party servicer client with a multi-year clean audit record that is now subject to an expansive interpretation of his company's obligations which goes well beyond the scope of his service contracts and the services he provides that have been audited without issue for many years. The previous Administration supported, in our opinion, an overbroad and unclear interpretation of that regulation that poses significant risk and barriers to some third party servicers.

In short, the third party servicer rules have been in place for some time and play a very important goal in safeguarding taxpayer funds, but we have experienced that the previous Administration's guidance and its enforcement based on that guidance may have gone overboard and threatens good operators.

I would be joined in any meeting by my colleague, Katherine Brodie. If we are able to schedule a meeting for the 26th, then our client, Don Grybas of GEMCOR, would also join us.

Best,
Kristina

I'm actually reaching out to you on behalf of a client with a Third Party Servicer policy question. He will be in town on Wednesday, July 26th and we were hoping to schedule a meeting with the appropriate person at the Department. Would you be able to properly direct my request? I sincerely appreciate your assistance.

Thank you!

Sincerely,
Erin

Sorry for the multiple invite, but sent out the earlier one with the wrong date. This time and day looks open on everyone's calendars, but let me know if there are any issues.

Thanks,

He explained that the consent issue is all his members are talking about, and that his organization is struggling to "keep this issue from boiling over." He also expressed his hope that we can have clearer guidance, and a possible workaround in time for the FSA Training Conference at the end of the month. Monday looks fairly tight scheduling wise, but it looks like everyone is free from 9AM to 10AM, 10:30AM to 11AM, 3:00 to 3:30pm, and 4:30 to 5:00. Are there time windows that people definitely cannot make? I'd like to propose several options to DOJ as to the timing of a call.

10:00 AM - 11:00 AM Lapse Plans Conference Call -- (b)(6)
General Counsels,

I am hopeful that we will not have to implement lapse plans for the foreseeable future, but I think it would be useful to have a call with agency GCs and Deputy GCs to ensure we have done a robust review of lapse plans to make any future shutdown as minimally disruptive as possible for federal employees and the American people.

I would like to have a call at 10 am tomorrow to discuss lapse plans. Please make every effort to have you or your deputy participate in the call.

Hi Everyone,

Just clarifying that we will have an internal pre-meet prep session from 11:30am-12:00noon tomorrow and will then call the hill from 12:00-12:30.

The Ed and Workforce Committee (Majority) has requested a briefing on borrower defense. Here is the request:

We would like an update on borrow defense claims. Some specific questions we have include:

- Does the Department have an exchange agreement with SSA to retrieve aggregate earnings information for borrower defense purposes? If so, please explain. If not, why not?
- How does the Department intend to obtain the individual earnings information of the borrower seeking relief?
- When obtaining earnings information from SSA, how would this process differ from the earnings information retrieved in compliance with the GE rule?

Let's plan to do an internal pre-meet from 11:30 and then call the committee at 11:30-12:00noon.

Thanks and please let me know if you have any questions.

-Scott

Unless we know something more in terms of how to describe that school, the best thing would be more them to simply name it in the provision.

Hi all,

We received the below urgent request to determine whether this language could be amended to address UTTC's situation. The immediate issues to my understanding is that UTTC is not a public institution, and (I believe) is not located in a distressed county per the original database we looked at.

Please take a look at this and let me know whether you have any thoughts today. I am happy to pull up a call if that is easiest.

Thank you to those who were able to make the listening session with Bryan Caplan this week, we had a really great conversation. Ryan Craig (bio here) had earlier asked for an opportunity to share some thoughts with a few staff members and, since his work is so complementary to Bryan's, I think he'd make for a good follow up. He was a participant in our Rethinking Higher Ed session and is the author of a new book coming out in June titled, A New U. - Faster + Cheaper Alternatives to College. Feel free to share with others.

- Cohort Default Rate flexibility: We have language in the CR to provide some additional flexibility to IHEs in certain circumstances. Can we talk about what kind of flexibility the Secretary has now to waive CDR penalties, and how often the Secretary has waived penalties or provided any kind of regulatory relief? Also, the United Tribes Technical College also has a CDR issue. The CR language allows the Secretary to waive the 70% program completion requirement for the purposes of meeting the exceptional mitigating circumstances definition. My understanding is that is that Southeast Kentucky Community and Technical College meets all of the other requirements for exceptional mitigating circumstances, is that correct? Does UTTC satisfy all of the other requirements as well?

All – In the last OGC Book Club meeting, we thought it would be fun to discuss at our next meeting books that have been made into movies. My guess is that this might take more than a couple of meetings, but we'll see ☺. So, please join us next week – movie-themed refreshments will be served.

P.S. The book has to have been turned into a movie. A series on Netflix doesn't count – so no Big, Little Lies this time. That can be the topic of another meeting.

Colleagues and Friends,
In anticipation to next week's Senator Values Action Team (SVAT), wanted to see if we could all gather for lunch (feel free to bring your own) to discuss a few items. I've invited Sarah Seitz from

Sen. Lankford's office as she can provide some additional context for the group regarding letters sent to each individual agency, topics to anticipate during next week's SVAT meeting, and strategy items to be looking toward for the 2019 National Prayer Breakfast. Also, inviting Julia Haller (HUD appointed counsel) and Adam Kissel (ED appointed counsel) to provide context around previous inter-agency rules.

In addition, would like for us to discuss the TH inter-agency calls. For this meeting, I've only invited the appointed directors at present.
Hope you will be able to make it.

Warm regards,
Andrea

Hi,

The purpose of the call is to brief Steven and Phil on the status of a request we may receive from the District Attorney (DA) in Pennsylvania regarding a recording OCR has as part of its files on an investigation. There is an interesting back story that resulted in ED averting a search warrant and the attached letter being sent to the DA today. I have also spoken with the AUSA and can update you. We seek any feedback on next steps.

would we want to do to ensure states are meeting this requirement? We have not highlighted other provisions of ESSA, but is this different because, as Toomey points out, many states do not have applicable laws on this issue?

Questions from Toomey:

1. We understand that ED is currently considering different options for monitoring state compliance with ESSA. We would like to know how ED plans to oversee the implementation of ESSA's "pass the trash" provision. Only a handful of states have laws or policies that prohibit the practice of passing the trash.

2. We understand that ESSA's "pass the trash" provision may fall under the jurisdiction of multiple programs at ED (for example, the Office of Civil Rights (OCR)). We would like to know who at ED is responsible for implementation of the "pass the trash" provision of ESSA.

3. Our understanding is that 17 states have not yet received ED approval of their ESSA plans (CA, ID, UT, AK, CO, NE, IA, OK, TX, MS, AL, KY, VA, NC, SC, RI, and FL). We would like to know whether ED is going to require these states to provide an assurance with their ESSA plans that they are in compliance with Sec. 8546 of ESSA.

Preparation meeting for 2:30 meeting on CSP Development Grant Issues -- GC's office or call in (Please use (b)(6)

Due to a conflict on Steven's schedule, we are moving this to noon to 12:30; I am sorry for the change. Thanks for your understanding.

On March 2, 2018, the Department published in the Federal Register the Charter School Developer grant Notice Inviting Applications. It can be found attached and here: notice inviting applications.

Subsequently, the FY 2018 Omnibus appropriations act was enacted into law. The Statement of the Managers for this legislation includes language indicating that, of the funds appropriated to the Charter School Program (CSP), "up to $7,500,000 [is] for developer grants to establish or expand charter schools in underserved, high-poverty, rural areas." The Statement of the Managers modifies language in the report accompanying the Senate appropriations committee bill, which indicates that CSP appropriations include "dedicated funding to expand charter schools in rural areas." While report language (and the Statement of Managers language)is non-binding, the program office seeks guidance on whether to make changes to the Developer grant competition in response to the additional language accompanying the Omnibus legislation. A decision memo outlining the various options prepared by the program office is attached below; it was revised and updated based on OGC comments and replaces the version of the memo that was originally in this meeting notice.

Hello,
Please use the updated version of the options memo, which includes an additional option (option c, the use of a competitive preference priority).

Thanks,
Soumya

The report accompanying the FY 2018 Omnibus appropriations bill (the Statement of the Managers) includes language reflecting Congressional intent that, of the funds appropriated to CSP, "up to $7,500,000 [is] for developer grants to establish or expand charter schools in underserved, high-poverty, rural areas." The Statement of the Managers modifies language in the report accompanying the Senate appropriations committee bill, which indicates that CSP appropriations include "dedicated funding to expand charter schools in rural areas." While report language is non-binding, we seek guidance on whether to make changes to the Developer grant competition in response to the additional language accompanying the Omnibus. A decision memo outlining the various options is attached.

Thanks,
Soumya

Please try to bring copies of the handouts, if possible. There will be a limited amount available at the meeting for those who cannot print the handouts prior. Thank you.

This meeting will be used to discuss the initial topic categories assigned to ED re: the School Safety Commission. This is for purposes of staffing the discrete issues and ultimately drafting the discrete parts that will go into a report at the end of the Commission's work.

It is critical that the principal office leaders attend this meeting and they should feel free to bring the person(s) whom they will assign to work on the discrete issue topics.

All,

Slight change of plans: there will no longer be a read-ahead draft for this meeting. Instead, HHS will present the draft it has been prepared and distribute copies for review. We will then schedule a follow-up meeting to discuss the draft.

See you at 3!

All,

Please join us for an interagency meeting on Monday. Please limit your agency's delegation to 2 (or, at most, 3) people. This invite has been sent to one person from each agency – please distribute to the appropriate members of your team. All attendees outside of the WH should fill out the below security link. HHS will distribute a read-ahead draft.

Many thanks!

Karen,

Thanks for your email. We think it would be easiest and helpful to discuss this on a call. Is there a time today or early next week that would work for you? On our end, it looks like we may have some availability from 2-3pm today and Monday or Tuesday after 4PM. If possible we'd also like to include our Principal Deputy General Counsel, Steven Menashi, on the call, but if scheduling conflicts mean that we need to have the call without him, we understand.

Thanks,

Would you have for a call this afternoon to further discuss Judge Kim's questions and next steps with you? We can be available at our originally scheduled call time of 3-4pm and anytime after 4pm, or if need be, we can arrange to be available earlier this afternoon as well. Dear BD 17-18 Team:

We have received policy direction from the Administration and are eager to begin writing issue papers in preparation for our upcoming Negotiated Rulemaking.

We would also like to use this time to familiarize new staff with the Neg Reg process, roles, and responsibilities; seasoned staff with some proposed changes to our approach and methods; and to garner any ideas and suggestions members of the team would like to bring forward for consideration.

For this first meeting, I would appreciate it if everyone would plan to attend the meeting in person. If you are only able to attend via conference call, please let me know.

Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns.

Kind regards,

MS. SMITH: Good morning, and thank you for being here. My name is Kathleen Smith, and I am Acting Assistant Secretary for the Office of Postsecondary Education. I am pleased to welcome you to this public hearing. I also am joined at this table by two other department officials, Annmarie Weisman from the Office of Postsecondary Education, and Caroline Hong from the Office of General Counsel.

Our representative from OGC this afternoon will be Amanda Andrade. This is the first of two public hearings that we are convening to gather input regarding the regulations that govern both borrower defense to repayment and the metrics to gauge success for gainful employment programs.

Increasing access to and affordability of higher education is a top priority for this administration, as is developing fair, effective, and improved regulations to protect individual borrowers from fraud, ensure accountability across institutions of higher education, and to protect taxpayers. Secretary DeVos is committed to ensuring that institutions that receive federal funding are serving their students well. Moreover, she appreciates the traditional path to postsecondary education is not the only option for meaningful educational opportunities, and that students should have access to strong trade vocational programs at a variety of types of institutions.

The secretary has made clear that her first priority is to protect students, and while she firmly believes that fraud is simply unacceptable, she also recognizes that last year's borrower defense rulemaking efforts missed an opportunity, in our opinion, to get it right. The result is a bit of a muddled process that is somewhat unfair to students and schools and puts taxpayers on the hook for significant costs.

Therefore, it is time to take a step back and make sure that these rules achieve their purpose, helping harmed students. It is the Department's aim, and this administration's commitment, to protect students from predatory practices, while also providing clear, fair, and balanced rules for colleges and universities to follow. Thus, we approach this hearing and our upcoming negotiated rulemaking with a commitment to ensuring every student has access to an education that will put them on a solid footing for success as they define it, be it further education, a career, or entrepreneurship, and holding schools accountable for practices that undercut students and taxpayers.

We anticipate that the Borrower Defense Negotiated Rulemaking Committee will begin its negotiations in November of 2017, and the Gainful Employment Negotiating Committee will begin its negotiations in December of 2017. Federal Register notices seeking nominations for negotiators will be out before those dates. So again, we thank you for dedicating your time and expertise to this very important process, and I appreciate your willingness to share your perspectives.

As to the logistics for this hearing and this time, many of you have already signed up for times to speak, and Annmarie will be calling you up according to the times you have registered for. We have some time slots for today, so if you have not signed up and would like to speak, please see our ed staff out at the front desk to sign up for a time. Speakers are asked to limit their remarks to five minutes for this initial round. If you get to the end of your five minutes, Annmarie will ask you to wrap up, and we ask you to do so within 20 seconds of her notice. If there's time available at the end and anybody who wants to speak has spoken, we will gladly asked people to come up for a second round, again, if there's time.

Please note that this hearing is being transcribed, and the transcription will be posted to our website in the next few weeks. This is a public hearing. We have a lot of people with cell phones and cameras and recording devices. You may, in fact, be recorded, so you just need to be aware of that. We welcome your written comments, as well.

If you have comments here today that you would like to submit, you can give them to me at the end of the day, or you can submit them to our staff out front. You can also post them on regulations.gov through July 12th. We do have three scheduled breaks today, one in the morning, from 10:30 to 10:40, lunch from 12:00 to 1:00, and a break this afternoon from 2:30 to 2:40. If we get to a period of time and there aren't speakers signed up, those breaks could be extended. We do ask that you silence your cell phones while you're in this room. You can use your cell phones out in the lobby. When you're called to speak, please come up, give your name, and if you're representing an organization, what organization you're representing. We do look forward to your comments. Again, thank you for your time, and we look forward to an interesting morning. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Good morning. Our first speaker is Jennifer Wang.

MS. WANG: Good morning. I'm Jennifer Wang, with the Institute for College Access and Success, also known as TICAS. We strongly oppose the delay, dismantling, or weakening of the gainful employment rule or the borrower defense rule.

Students, veterans and taxpayers have waited far too long already for these critical protections from unmanageable student debt, sudden school closures, and waste, fraud, and abuse in higher education. They cannot afford a pause in the Education Department's progress against waste, fraud, and abuse. Here are just some examples of the scores of failing programs with abysmal outcomes uncovered by the gainful employment rule.

The Art Institute of Fort Lauderdale's associate's degree program in video production charges $44,000 in tuition and fees, despite producing outcomes like a 17 percent on-time completion rate, a 25 percent job placement rate, median graduate earnings of only $14,000, less than the federal minimum wage working full time, and median debt of $29,000.

The McCann School of Business and Technology associate's degree in medical assisting, in Hazleton, Pennsylvania, has a 7 percent on-time completion rate, a 46 percent job placement rate, and its graduates typically earn only $20,000, less than the average earnings of a high school graduate.

Graduates from Florida Technical College associate's degree in medical assisting, in Orlando, earn only $14,500 a year, less than the federal minimum wage working full time, and owe over $17,000 in student loan debt. Students deserve to be proactively warned that these programs failed government standards, and the programs will lose funding next year if they do not improve. It is the Department's job to ensure that taxpayers do not continue to subsidize failing programs based on the next round of rates.

It is also the Department's job to ensure that schools are held accountable for ensuring that this information actually makes it to the hands of students and borrowers. However, its latest shameful action delaying the rule could mean most prospective students would never know about these warnings before they enroll.

That is unconscionable, given the outcomes at failing programs. Last month, a federal court upheld the gainful employment rule for the fourth time. The judge deliberately limited his order so as to avoid upending the entire GE regulatory scheme.

Yet, the Department is now citing this extremely narrow court ruling as a pretext to upend the entire regulation. But the evidence is clear. Delaying or weakening the gainful employment rule will lead to a new race to the bottom, as unscrupulous schools compete to enroll as many students as possible, without regard to the quality of the training, the students' preparation, or job prospects. According to the CBO, dismantling the rule would also cost the government a lot of money, to the tune of $1.3 billion over the next ten years. The borrower defense regulation was just finalized in November 2016.

There is simply no justification for revisiting it. Rather than wasting government resources on a new negotiated rulemaking process, the Department should use its limited resources to immediately implement the rule, including the provisions on forced arbitration and class action waivers. We urge the Department to immediately act on the tens of thousands of borrower defense claims pending under the 1995 borrower defense regulation.

The Department has, in its possession, evidence that students were defrauded at many schools. We are deeply disturbed that the Department has not approved a single new borrower defense claim since January 20th. Forty-seven attorneys general, Republicans and Democrats, recently contacted more than 100,000 former Corinthian students eligible for discharges by attestation, which has likely generated a significant increase in claims. The Department has both a moral and a legal obligation to promptly review these applications and grant relief to defrauded students. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Our next speaker is Victoria Roytenberg.

MS. ROYTENBERG: Good morning. My name is Victoria Roytenberg, and I'm a staff attorney with the Project on Predatory Student Lending at the Legal Services Center at Harvard Law School. The project represents low-income student borrowers who've been harmed by predatory for-profit schools.

Our clients come to us with crushing student loan debt from schools that defrauded them. As the Department is well aware, these schools enroll students by using deceptive advertising and unrelenting recruiting, and then try to silence students with Draconian contracts, including forced arbitration clauses. Every single day, we hear from borrowers from all across the country about their experiences at for-profit colleges. Our clients were promised jobs in their fields and high salaries that never materialized. As a result of these unfulfilled promises made by these schools, our clients can't pay their debt. Subsequently, they default on their loans and experience coercive collection in their wages and tax returns. Our clients want to go back to school, but can't afford to because they've used up all of their federal student aid.

Our clients have ruined credit scores that, among other things, foreclose job opportunities. Our clients experience stress, anxiety, and depression as a result of all of this. In short, our clients' experiences at for-profit colleges have caused them to suffer in every single aspect of their lives. In light of this, I urge the Department to do two things.

First, any new rule must include the ban on forced arbitration clauses and class action waivers that were included the regulations that were set to take effect July 1st. These provisions stop borrowers from bringing their claims in court and force them into secretive proceedings that don't permit discovery or appellate review. As a result, evidence from one arbitration that could be relevant to law enforcement and other students is kept confidential and hidden. Class action waivers prohibit borrowers from bringing claims together, denying them the efficiencies and access to representation that class actions typically provide.

Faced with the burden and expense of raising identical claims individually and of finding representation for a lawsuit to be prosecuted in a secret forum, few borrowers can pursue their claims against schools at all.

The new regulations enabled students to seek relief in court for harm caused by the for-profit college industry and, in doing so, facilitated better oversight by the Department and for public enforcement. Second, the Department must grant relief right away to far too many borrowers who've been waiting for far too long.

Borrowers are entitled to a remedy for the crushing debt they hold as a result of attending schools that lied to them and defrauded them, and they need that remedy now. That remedy exists already in the higher education act and in existing Department of Education regulations that were promulgated in the mid-1990s. The regulations that were set to go into effect on July 1st didn't create a new right. During this new round of rulemaking, the Department still has a legal obligation to grant relief to tens of thousands of borrowers who've been waiting. Over and over again, we have seen irrefutable evidence that schools have been defrauding borrowers.

Yet, the Department continues to collect on millions of loans induced by fraud and to delay granting relief, relief to borrowers who have been waiting years. The project currently represents hundreds of thousands of former students who attended ITT Tech, a national for-profit chain that had 140 campuses in 38 states and online, that filed bankruptcy last year.

ITT had been sued by multiple federal enforcement agencies and state attorneys general, all of whom investigated ITT and identified numerous violations of the law, including that ITT misled students about loans, accreditation status, and job placement rates, used deceptive and high-pressure tactics to get students to sign up, and had unfair, deceptive, and unconscionable terms in their enrollment agreements. The U.S. Senate found that ITT trained recruiters to use a pain funnel, asking potential students to identify the pain in their life and presenting ITT enrollment as a solution to it. The Senate investigation also found that ITT manipulated its low retention rates and high default rates, created fake scholarships, and preyed on veterans and service members to stay eligible for federal funding.

These are not mere allegations. These are findings based on federal and state investigations. Yet, thousands of borrowers continue to have their lives destroyed by bogus debt, including their wages garnished and their tax returns seized.

Only a tiny percentage of the thousands of ITT borrowers who have applied to the Department for loan cancellation based on their well-documented defenses have even had their claims addressed. Students of ITT are not alone. ITT is just one in a long list of companies whose fraud and harm to students is well documented. The Department recently told members of Congress that there are over 70,000 pending applications. For many of those applicants, and many others who have not applied and, nevertheless, face down harmful and fraudulent debt --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. ROYTENBERG: -- the Department cannot possibly need more evidence than it has, and now is the time to grant relief. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Ben Miller.

MR. MILLER: Good morning. My name is Ben Miller. I'm from the Center for American Progress. To keep my time short, I would just like to quickly make four points about the gainful employment regulation. First, the Department of Education has a legal requirement to continue enforcing the regulations on its books until the rules are rewritten and take effect.

Gainful employment became effective on July 1, 2015, and remains in effect until the effective date of any regulation that replaces it. It's been upheld in court several times, and that means the Department of Education must keep taking actions that are required for it to do under the rule. That means doing things like generating completer lists to be given to schools, sending data over to the Social Security Administration to obtain earnings information, and publishing debt to earnings ratios. Failure to faithfully follow the requirements in the regulation while the Department is in the process of discussing the rule again would raise serious questions about whether or not the Department is negotiating in good faith.

Second, the Department of Education has a legal obligation to ensure that the regulatory process is informed by the highest quality data available. This is particularly important for fulfilling obligations to engage in public consultation. Commenters must be able to analyze and respond to data on which the Department may ultimately rely to make various decisions.

The validity of any rule will be called into question if commenters cannot rely upon data already within the Department's possession or information it could obtain with reasonable effort. It would also raise questions about whether the Department fulfilled its obligations under the Data Quality Act. To be clear, this means the Department should be publishing debt to earnings data for the multiple additional years of students who completed gainful employment programs that the Department collected last year. It should also continue to collect and publish data for newer cohorts, to understand how circumstances have changed since the first data's publication.

Finally, it should also include repayment rate data and other elements currently listed for potential inclusion on the disclosure form. Third, developments since the last rulemaking show that circumstances still demand a strong rule. Gainful employment discourages the low quality programs that have closed to not come back, while ones with good results have nothing to fear, but problems remain.

There are still hundreds of programs with tens of thousands of graduates that leave graduates with unaffordable levels of debt compared to their income. Finally, transparency is no replacement for accountability. Simply disclosing information late in the application process is insufficient to protect students and taxpayers. Choice dynamics and higher education are ill understood and rely on a host of factors, including geography and marketing, that cannot be solved with just transparency. Moreover, the taxpayer rightly gets no say in individual choices about where a student takes their federal aid. Therefore, taxpayers need to know that their money will not be used at low-value programs that produce overly indebted graduates who are unlikely to repay their loans. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Reid Setzer.

MR. SETZER: Good morning. My name is Reid Setzer, and I am the government affairs director at Young Invincibles, a national non-partisan organization dedicated to expanding economic opportunity for young people and amplifying the voices of our generation in the political process.

Young Invincibles has advocated for students and consumers since our founding, and we were involved in the public comment and rulemaking processes for both the borrower defense and gainful employment rules. These opportunities were critical to us in our mission because too many young people were being taken advantage of by predatory, poor performing, for-profit schools that weren't being held accountable. Because of the progress we have made in curbing those abuses, we strongly oppose the delay, weakening, or elimination of the borrower defense and gainful employment rules.

Before taking action, the Department of Education amassed a strong pool of evidence, indicating that many for-profit colleges were dubiously profiting off of federal student aid, without providing quality educational programs that advanced graduates' career opportunities.

For example, in 2012, for-profit education companies were found to enroll roughly 10 percent of students nationwide, but despite this, they received 25 percent of Pell grants and student Stafford loan dollars, and accounted for 47 percent of all federal student loan defaults.

In 2009, students who earned Bachelors degrees at for-profit colleges had, on average, roughly four times the debt than students who graduated from public colleges and nearly double the amount of debt of private and non-profit graduates. In 2014, the Department of Education reported that 72 percent of for-profit college graduates earn less than those with just a high school diploma. Despite this grim picture, over the past few years, we've seen positive movement within the for-profit sector to improve the quality of the for-profit college market, spurred, in part, by the Department promulgating the gainful employment rule.

The rule has prompted voluntary improvements. Out of the over 500 career education programs flagged under the first year of applying the rule, over 300 have already been voluntarily shut down by the institution offering them. Many failing programs were at schools we already know were deceiving students and have closed, like ITT Tech and Westwood College, sparing untold numbers of students from burning their limited aid on worthless credentials.

Additionally, the rule has not had the catastrophic impact predicted by the for-profit industry. Approximately 75 percent of all programs pass the debt-to-earnings ratios prescribed by the rule, and around 90 percent of colleges -- public, private and for-profit --with career education programs had no failing programs at all, including proprietary chains, like Strayer University, Capella University, and several others. While the rule has had positive effects on the for-profit higher education market, it is also important to know the majority of programs subject to the gainful employment rule are at public and private non-profit institutions.

In fact, career education programs from Harvard and Johns Hopkins also failed the standards outlined by the rule, indicating that high-debt programs with limited earning potential will be monitored regardless of sector.

While these developments are promising, there are still several schools operating various programs that fail the first round of the rule and are saddling students with debt that is more than double the average amount of annual wages earned by participants in that specific program.

The accountability measures within the rule must remain in place to protect students and taxpayers from ineffective and predatory programs operating in the market and prompt more voluntary, positive responses, like those we've seen so far. Equally key to supplementing the protections granted students and taxpayers by the gainful employment rule is the more recently finalized borrower defense rule. The borrower defense rule creates clear processes and strengthens protections for students who have been misled and are looking to get back on track towards their goal of obtaining higher education.

By delaying enforcement and opening a negotiated rulemaking to change the rule, the Department allows schools to continue subjecting defrauded students to mandatory arbitration clauses and a more opaque application process, both of which burden the exercise of their statutory rights.

The delay also hinders the ability of the Department to hold accountable schools that misrepresent key aspects of their educational programs. Delaying the rule will also eliminate notices given to students attending or considering attending schools that have been accused of illegal behavior by various government agencies. The need to enforce the borrower defense rule can also be seen in the slow discharge process that has led to tens of thousands of borrowers waiting anxiously as promises to discharge their debt remain unfulfilled, and applications that have been open for years go unresolved. The Department should be putting its weight and energy behind granting individual discharge applications and issuing group discharges wherever justified, not embarking on another set of negotiated rulemakings.

Over 50 organizations working on behalf of students, consumers, veterans, active service members, faculty and staff, civil rights, and college access all support the rules, as well as 20 state attorneys general, and dozens of members of Congress. Furthermore, 78 percent of Americans say that they support loan relief for borrowers whose schools provided deceptive information about their programs or outcomes.

These rules, after years of development and careful consideration by Department officials and stakeholders, should be given the chance to be fully implemented.

The Department should end the negotiated rulemaking process they have begun and focus on protecting people, not predatory colleges and failing programs. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Joanna K. Darcus.

MS. DARCUS: Good morning. My name is Joanna Darcus. I'm an attorney at the National Consumer Law Center. Today, I speak on behalf of our low-income clients in support of strong borrower defense and gainful employment rules. We condemn the Department's decision to delay both rules.

Together, these rules provide critical protections to students and student loan borrowers who were ensnared by deceptive practices and false promises. These rules also serve to protect the schools that do right by students, providing a high-quality education with the federal tax dollars they receive. Unfortunately, we haven't had a chance to see just what a difference strong rules can make in this sphere.

Stalling these rules disproportionately harms certain groups of students and student loan borrowers. Many predatory, for-profit schools target first-generation students, students of color, veterans, and other non-traditional students. These groups represent a large share of those who stand to benefit from effective enforcement of the borrower defense and gainful employment rules. They deserve better. Predatory for-profit schools targeted and ripped off our clients. Our clients are not unique. We work closely with thousands of civil, legal aid, government and private attorneys whose clients are similarly situated.

Students and loan borrowers tend to seek out attorneys when their situations feel dire. Often, they believe they have no recourse. They've done everything they could do on their own. With hopes dashed, time wasted, and unaware of further options for relief, they come to us in their distress. Saddled with debt they cannot afford to repay, many student loan borrowers have now experienced default and the debt collection activity that comes along with it.

Private debt collection contractors make money, while student loan borrowers struggle with wage garnishment and offsets of their tax refunds and Social Security benefits. Those who apply for borrower defense relief may receive respite in the form of stop collections or forbearances, but those are not permanent resolutions. Those who are in default continue to face onerous consequences that includes negative credit reporting, which can impede their ability to obtain housing, or even employment in some fields. The gainful employment regulations were created to ensure that more students do not find themselves in the same predicament as our clients.

The Higher Education Act requires career education programs to prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation. Early reports suggest that the gainful employment regulations are working well. Yet, instead of fully implementing and enforcing the gainful employment rules, the Department of Education has chosen to focus its attention on rewriting them.

The Department does a disservice to students and taxpayers when it allows programs to continue to receive federal aid dollars, even when those programs cannot demonstrate that their graduates land well-paying jobs that set them up to repay the debt they incurred to the federal government. The Department has taken the same delaying approach with the borrower defense rules. Students who were defrauded or left high and dry when their schools broke their promises have had the right to raise defenses to repayment of student loans for decades, but for years, the Department never saw fit to give them a process. As attorneys who represent individual student loan borrowers, we know that the absence of a process is often tantamount to denial of a right.

Our clients, and tens of thousands like them, are still waiting for the Department to review their borrower defense applications or grant relief and actually discharge their loans. This state of affairs is neither sustainable, nor acceptable. Students deserve relief, and they've waited too long for a process.

The Department should review claims and provide relief now because too many schools strip students of the opportunity to take fraud and deception claims to court. They force students into secret arbitration proceedings and prevent students with similar concerns from pursuing their claims together in class action proceedings. Lawsuits create public records that can assist law enforcement and regulatory agencies when they're investigating school practices. Delaying the borrower defense regulations will put student rights to go to court on hold. Students need their day in court now. The borrower defense regulations also provide important updates to other statutory discharges. For example, closed school discharges are available to many students, yet historically, only a tiny fraction of eligible students obtain that relief.

The provisions that make closed school discharges automatic after three years ensure that borrowers who are entitled to that relief actually receive it. The regulations also provide long overdue updates to the criteria used to discharge loans when schools falsely certify their students' ability to benefit from their programs of study.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. DARCUS: The borrower defense and gainful employment regulations offer students and borrowers both prevention and a cure for the predatory practices that some schools employ. Thank you for this opportunity to speak on behalf of strong borrower defense and gainful employment regulations.

MS. DARCUS: David Halperin.

MR. HALPERIN: Good morning, and thank you. I'm David Halperin. I'm a self-employed lawyer. For decades, the U.S. government has failed to adequately address an epidemic of waste, fraud, and abuse by for-profit colleges using taxpayer dollars.

There are good schools, great teachers, and outstanding students in for-profit higher education, but there are many bad, predatory companies, big and small, and the Department of Education's failures to establish and enforce strong rules has meant that those bad companies are not compelled to stop misbehaving.

It's meant a race to the bottom. The more colleges abuse students, the more they commit fraud, the more money they make. This disgraceful behavior has been documented by the Senate Health Committee and numerous media investigations.

I have spoken with hundreds of students, staff, faculty, and executives who have described broad patterns of abuses. There have been, in recent years, scores of law enforcement investigations and actions against for-profit schools. Demand from owners for quick profits has led to relentless pressure to sign up as many students as possible, regardless of whether the program would help them; to charge astronomical tuition, often ten times the price of community college, and yet spend very little on instruction; to give false information to the Department and to students about accreditation, job placement, starting salaries; to use bait and switch lead generation tactics and high-pressure sales pitches; to fake students' high school diplomas and financial aid status.

A librarian at Everest College called me, heartbroken because the school admitted a student who was severely mentally disabled, could barely read. He wanted to be a police officer, but that couldn't happen. Everest enrolled him in its criminal justice program anyway and took his money.

Its owner, Corinthian Colleges, was, at the time, getting $1.4 billion a year of our tax money. A Florida mom, named Sara Pierce, was misled by a Kaplan recruiter into signing up for an online nutrition science program that she learned, way too late, lacked the accreditation to get her the job that she sought. Tiffany Nesbitt, and other dental assistant students at a Kaplan program in Charlotte, had the same complaint, leading to an attorney general probe and a shutdown of the program. Mike DiGiacomo, an Army veteran who wanted to design video games, was misled by not one, but two big chains, EDMC and Career Education Corporation, and left with worthless credits and $90,000 of debt.

There's been bad behavior, also, at ITT, DeVry, Globe, Vatterott, Bridgepoint, and many others. The University of Phoenix reported a 4 percent graduation rate in its online division. The company was getting $2 billion a year from tax payers. The result, hundreds of thousands of Americans with their financial futures ruined.

Some came to the last rulemaking to tell how they'd been deceived and left with huge debt. The hardest hit were our troops and veterans, and then single moms, people of color, and older Americans, and the abuses, contrary to what the industry wants you to believe, are still widespread. The problem has been made worse because for-profit colleges impose forced arbitration clauses that keep bad practices concealed and unpunished, and because there's been almost no debt relief for students who were defrauded by colleges that they believed had the Department's seal of approval. The previous administration had started getting a handle on the problem. It canceled recognition of weak accreditor ACICS. It rejected the conversion to non-profit status of a school that continued to enrich the prior owner, Carl Barney.

It stepped up enforcement against abuses. After extensive rulemaking, it established the gainful employment and borrower defense rules. These are rules that would save taxpayers billions and help students by channeling federal aid towards those programs and schools that are actually helping them train for careers.

Now, you suspended these rules, which is unlawful, and you propose to throw them away, potentially. Don't do that. It sends the wrong message. It tells the scam artists, from the strip mall to Wall Street, that they're back in business. It tells America you're standing with predatory companies and against hardworking people seeking better lives. Cancel this rulemaking process. Focus, instead, on enforcing these common sense rules to protect students and protect taxpayers.

MS. WEISMAN: Julie Murray.

MS. MURRAY: Good morning. I'm Julie Murray, an attorney with Public Citizen, a non-profit consumer advocacy organization here in Washington, D.C. Public Citizen has been involved in both the development and legal defense of the gainful employment and borrower defense rules.

I'm here to urge you, in the strongest possible terms, not to revisit these critical rules, which are important to protecting both students and taxpayers. If the Department walks away from these rules, it will effectively waive a white flag of surrender to predatory schools that defraud students and offer useless degrees.

As just one example of the need for these rules, I'd like to highlight the borrower defense rule's provisions on arbitration and class action waivers. The rule cuts off direct loan funding to any school that requires students to bring claims in secretive arbitration proceedings, including fraud claims, in many cases. Once in these proceedings, students generally can't join their claims with those of other students, so they've got to go it alone. Oftentimes, the deck is stacked against them in these private forum. Corinthian Colleges provides a case in point. It used forced arbitration provisions to evade accountability for years, and students and taxpayers have paid a steep price, indeed.

As of January 2017, the Department had canceled more than $558 million in federal loans held by students who attended one of the Corinthian schools. We know, and the Department found, that these students were harmed by systematic wrongdoing by Corinthian. They deserve relief that they could not get from their now bankrupt school.

The same is true for the tens of thousands of others who have borrower defense applications that remain pending and are not being processed, and many more who are eligible for relief, but who do not know it, and have not yet applied. Though many of these students could have been made whole by the wrongdoer, by Corinthian Colleges, or might never have been harmed by the school in the first place, had the company not been able to rely on forced arbitration provisions as it did. In the years just before Corinthian went bankrupt, Corinthian relied on forced arbitration provisions to force case after case out of court. Forced arbitration provided no meaningful avenue of relief for students and did not stand as an effective deterrent to Corinthian.

Using publicly available arbitration data, Public Citizen determined that between 2011 and 2015, only one student, a single student who attended Corinthian during that time, was able to receive a monetary award against the company through an arbitrator's final decision, and only 71 students brought arbitration against Corinthian in the first place, a reflection of the high cost of litigating individual arbitration proceedings, because that's what was required, and the poor outlook for recovery in that biased forum.

It's a drop in the bucket. There is no sound reason for taxpayers to subsidize a school that uses this kind of abusive scheme with its students to avoid accountability for its proven wrongdoing. The borrower defense rule should be implemented immediately, as the law requires, and the Department should abandon its plans to revisit the rule, which has already been the subject of extensive negotiation and public comment. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on behalf of consumers.

MS. WEISMAN: Thomas Gokey. Thomas Gokey. We'll try him again in a few minutes. We'll go on to the next person, who is Barmak Nassirian.

MR. NASSIRIAN: Good morning. My name is Barmak Nassirian. I serve as the director of federal policy with the American Association of State Colleges and Universities here in Washington. AASCU is a membership organization of about 400 public, four-year colleges, universities, and state systems of higher education.

I do appreciate the opportunity to present brief comments on the Department's proposed reregulation of its two final rules, the gainful employment rule, for which I was a negotiator, and the regulation on borrower defenses to repayment. These two critical rules are interrelated, in that the former, gainful, is an effort at promoting program integrity and preventing future predatory practices, while the latter is intended to provide relief to victims of past predatory behavior, and simultaneously preventing subpar providers from shielding themselves from accountability through forced arbitration and class action waivers.

These rules were developed in response to well-documented evidence of widespread waste, fraud, and abuse by unscrupulous providers, and both were promulgated in meticulous compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act and the applicable provisions of the Higher Education Act, including its negotiated rulemaking and master calendar provisions.

Both rules were subjected to, and survived, extensive judicial review. In addition, Congress had multiple opportunities to defund or rescind the rules, particularly through the Congressional Review Act, in the case of the borrower defense reg, and it chose not to do so. The Department's unilateral decision to postpone consumer notification provisions of the gainful employment rule and its delay of the July 1, 2017 effective date for the borrower defense rule, therefore, represents an extreme policy choice that runs counter to the public interest, harms vulnerable students, and exposes taxpayers to enormous future cost.

The harm to students and taxpayers, furthermore, will extend beyond the reach of the Department's own programs and will affect the nation's active duty service members, as well as veterans, through the funding revenues from the Department of Defense's tuition assistance program and the Department of Veterans' Affairs GI Bill educational benefits.

Ironically, and this is the most interesting aspect of this choice, by delaying these very minimal accountability assurances of the two regs in question, the Department also prolongs the enrollment and financial agony of the for-profit sector, in whose benefit, some believe, these delays have been effected.

There's ample evidence that in partially addressing the most toxic programs and the worst practices within the sector, these rules were gradually restoring a measure of confidence in the sector, which will now suffer an additional couple of years of uncertainty and lack of public trust as the new regulatory process would unfold. Should the Department choose to embark on its regulatory process, it will no doubt be as impressed by the weight of evidence in favor of robust action on behalf of students and taxpayers as it was when it first developed these rules.

Unfortunately, even if any future rules prove adequate to the Department's duty to protect Title IV programs from waste, fraud, and abuse, the rules will take time to develop and will be unlikely to go into effect until July of 2019. Barring immediate remedial action, the decision to delay the borrower defense rule would unnecessarily prolong the suffering of tens of thousands of victims of past fraud.

Fortunately, the statutory language in the Higher Education Act provides clear authority for discharging predatory debt, and the Department needs to only organize its internal administrative processes to expedite relief for victims with legitimate claims under state law. In the interests of protecting students and taxpayers from ongoing fraud, the Department would also be well advised to administratively prevent the use of forced arbitration or class action waivers by unscrupulous providers. With regard to the gainful employment rule, the new regulatory process may, in fact, provide an important opportunity for more effective, but less complex and less onerous regulatory approach to the statutory provisions.

The Department may be able to provide significant regulatory relief, while simultaneously strengthening the substance of the regulation, if it chooses to do so. Success in this regard would require good faith action on the part of the Department in the selection of negotiators and its approach to the task it has undertaken. State colleges and universities stand ready to assist the Department in this important national effort. Thank you. Good to see you again.

MS. WEISMAN: Thomas Gokey. Randi Weingarten.

MS. WEINGARTEN: Good morning. I'm glad to be in this building for the first time since January 19th. My name is Randi Weingarten, and I have the great honor of representing the 1.6 million members of the AFT. We are the nation's largest union of college and university faculty, and we have members who work at higher education institutions that are both public and private, both not-for-profit and for-profit. Many of our members have confronted, firsthand, the issues of affordability and accessibility of higher education.

This is why we offer our members student debt clinics, to help them learn how to lower their monthly payments on their federal student debt, and eventually have access to public service loan forgiveness. Our members have told us loads of stories in these clinics, and we know a lot, from them and from other places, about what happens when students have unaffordable college debt or attend a for-profit college that promises an education it can't or won't deliver.

For this reason, we oppose any and all attempts by the Department to delay, dismantle, or weaken rules that protect students and taxpayers from predatory for-profit colleges. We proudly stand with the 18 states that heard our call to step in, where the federal government has stepped away, and who filed suit last week against Betsy DeVos and the U.S. Department of Education over the delay of the borrower defense rule. What the Department should be doing is rigorously enforcing these current rules, including moving forward with providing relief to defrauded borrowers and preventing education con artists from fleecing American taxpayers.

Predatory colleges across the country have gutted the aspirations of working people, many of them first-generation college students, veterans, and people of color, while offering them the false hope of a good job and a fair wage.

Just about the worst thing -- just about, actually, the thing that's worse than ripping off students with worthless degrees from for-profit colleges is denying the help to relieve their substantial debt and allowing these predatory practices to continue.

The most recent borrower defense rule, which the administration now wants to delay and rewrite, standardizes the process for eligible students to relieve their student loan debt from unscrupulous colleges and implement important financial accountability standards for the riskiest programs. The gainful employment regulation is about two things, transparency, providing students information, and second, stopping federal funding to programs that leave students with a mountain of debt and a worthless degree.

AFT members teach in these programs that are subject to the gainful employment standards, and our members want them enforced. Why? Because we know the difference between the real educations that institutions provide and dead-end make work that bad actors in the sector do.

Repealing the gainful employment regulation will cost the American people over $1.3 billion over ten years, so why does the Department of Education want to do away with a rule that protects students' and taxpayers' investments in higher education?

Let me be blunt. Students should not have to resort to lawsuits to deal with fraud, like that which Trump University was accused of, nor should they suffer when institutions like Corinthian College uses bankruptcy to try to avoid their bad deeds. When Secretary DeVos visited schools in Ohio with me this past April, seeing, by the way, the tremendous work that public schools can do, she asked several times whether we could find some common ground.

I'm here to say this.

From preschool to graduate school, our students should be our common ground, and their needs and aspirations must trump profit and ideology. The administration's actions to delay and undermine these rules embolden predatory practices, and they wreak havoc on students who want to get a decent education and land good jobs.

The Department should protect students and taxpayers by rigorously enforcing the current borrower defense rule and the gainful employment rule. Abandon, please abandon the plans to delay, weaken, or otherwise roll back these regulations. Please move forward to provide relief to our future, provide relief to people who have been defrauded. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Alexis Goldstein.

MS. GOLDSTEIN: Thank you. Good morning. I'm Alexis Goldstein, with Americans for Financial Reform. To be perfectly frank, I can't believe we're doing this again. Just last year, the Department of Education went through the rigorous process of negotiated rulemaking on borrower defense.

Previous to that, they did the same thing for gainful employment, and yet, here we are today, wasting the Department's time and taxpayer resources, when the Department has heard from all constituencies already in the two previous rulemakings.

The gainful employment and borrower defense rules should be rigorously enforced, as so many people have said so already today, not re-opened to be dismantled. In the meantime, this administration has turned its backs on students who've been scammed by the very schools that these rules are meant to hold accountable.

These students still wait, their lives on hold, their credit ruined, in many cases, their wages garnished, their taxes offset, while the Department stonewalls even members of the U.S. Senate in a bipartisan request for basic information about the number of borrower defense applications discharged, received so far this year, and other basic information. While students wait and wait and wait for the debt cancellation they're owed by law, this current administration has hired Robert Eitel.

Robert Eitel took a leave of absence from being the vice president for Regulatory Legal Services for the for-profit chain Bridgepoint, a chain that would benefit not only from the illegal delay of borrower defense that this administration has advanced, but benefit once again from any dismantling of this decades-old rule.

The illegal delay of the borrower defense rule update will benefit the kinds of schools that have collapsed in recent years under the weight of their own fraud, schools like Corinthian which, before it went bankrupt, faced charges of false job placement statistics, predatory lending, securities fraud, unlawful use of military seals in advertising, all using billions in taxpayer back loans to make its executives into millionaires.

Schools like ITT Tech long abused not only its students, but also U.S. taxpayers, through its misconduct, facing numerous lawsuits and investigations, including, to name just two, one by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and an investigation by 13 state attorneys general, for lying to students. Many students who were conned by these schools, including schools whose representatives I see in the room today -- I'll be very curious to see if they will give public testimony or just sit and listen and backchannel -- they wanted to come, but they couldn't take off of work.

They couldn't travel to D.C. because they don't have the money to do it. I'm going to read, as quickly as I possibly can, some of their words. Jessica King attended Everest, in Newport News, Virginia. She found out through her own research that the campus she attended would have failed the gainful employment standards had they been in place when she was enrolled.

She was told by an employer that she should remove her time at Everest from her resume because it was hurting her, due to the school's reputation. As it stands, she remains buried in debt, despite the fact that the school took out loans for her, without her consent. Alicia Stevens is a 71-year-old grandmother, who graduated from Florida Metropolitan University in 2007. She was diagnosed with breast cancer right after she graduated. She writes after surgery, I began looking for work. I didn't have much luck. Once I finally got an interview, I was informed by the HR person that my degree was worthless. I live in county housing, on Section 8, in order to afford living here.

At the age of 71, this loan will be forgiven when I die. Brian Pearl, also from Florida, writes, quote, I cannot even get any kind of licensure in the state I am currently living in, in New Jersey, because the state only recognizes degrees from regionally accredited institutions. The admissions people, he writes salespeople in parentheses, told us that national accreditation is better, end quote.

The organization I work for, Americans for Financial Reform, was formed in the wake of the financial crisis, where bad actors packaged and securitized the American dream and specifically targeted low-income and minority communities. These are the same communities -- those same communities targeted by the subprime crisis were targeted once again by for-profit colleges. In internal documents obtained by the Department of Justice, Corinthian described its target demographic as people who were feeling isolated and stuck. This targeting worked. The biggest increase in enrollment at for-profit schools came in the immediate wake of the financial crisis, where the same people who lost their wealth due to the subprime crisis were once again targeted when many Americans were feeling stuck.

Dismantling the gainful employment and borrower defense rules will do nothing more than unleash a new wave of waste, fraud, and abuse. This country teaches its citizens that education is the path to a better life, but for far too many years, the Department of Education has been allowing Title IV funds to flow to institutions engaging in fraud that have turned this dream into a nightmare.

The Department has a choice of where it goes next. If it continues down this path of re-opening the gainful employment and borrower defense rules, its legacy will be damning students to poverty, while making executives of proprietary institutions into millionaires.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. GOLDSTEIN: I sincerely hope the Department chooses a different path. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Cheryl L. Smith.

MS. SMITH: Good morning. I'm Cheryl Smith, senior vice president for government affairs at the United Negro College Fund. I need to put on my glasses. UNCF's comments are informed by our 73-year history of promoting college success for minority students.

We also represent private, regionally accredited, historically Black colleges and universities, institutions that provide an affordable and high-quality education for academically and economically disadvantaged students, with high levels of student satisfaction.

As the Department begins a new borrower defense regulatory process, we urge the Department to keep five major goals in mind. First, protect students harmed by fraud and predatory practices. UNCF supports an equitable, transparent, and timely administrative process, and legal recourse without forced arbitration, for students harmed by institutions with a pattern of misconduct. In particular, the Department should allow the closed-school discharge provisions in the current rule to go into effect, which would expedite relief for impacted students and enable all borrowers to receive earlier and accurate information about their loan discharge rights.

Second, UNCF urges the Department to continue to identify students impacted by school closures and ensure that their Pell grant eligibility is restored, so that these low-income students have the necessary financial aid to finish their educational programs. Any needed regulatory improvement should be addressed in this rulemaking.

Third, ensure that the borrower defense regulation does not impose onerous burdens on HBCUs with unintended consequences. UNCF remains concerned about the overly broad definition of misrepresentation in the current regulation, which could unfairly leave HBCUs financially liable, with no time limitations for frivolous claims for debt relief. Regulatory language should distinguish and prioritize claims based on systemic, purposeful, and material misrepresentations from claims based on minor and inadvertent errors. By making these distinctions, the Department can focus its resources on legitimate claims based on wrongdoing.

At the same time, this would protect HBCUs from claims that lack merit but, nonetheless, would require unresourced institutions to spend precious resources on legal and other costs of participating in adjudicatory proceedings, resources that could be better spent serving students.

Fourth, strengthen due process protections. For example, the current regulation does not detail explicit timelines by which the Department will make debt relief determinations, which could leave both students and institutions in limbo. Nor does it provide equal opportunities for engagement by institutions.

The rule does not establish a process for institutions to appeal final decisions by the Department or request reconsideration based on new evidence. Any future regulations should include due process protections that are equitable and transparent for both students and institutions. Fifth, the Department should establish a separate rulemaking committee solely concerned with re-evaluating financial responsibility standards for non-profit institutions, with appropriate representation from HBCUs.

UNCF has provided -- and, I might say, our partner organizations -- has provided feedback to the Department on financial responsibility and disclosure provisions in the current regulation, which would require private colleges and universities, including private HBCUs, to pledge collateral or letters of credit based on certain triggering events that may not relate to financial condition of an institution.

Moreover, the current regulation layers these new financial demands on top of existing, but flawed, financial responsibility standards that the Department has failed to fix. These new requirements are a blunt instrument that could cause cascading negative financial impacts on small and under-resourced private institutions that are not engaged in misconduct. Mandatory disclosures of required financial protections based on ill-conceived criteria will prejudice students against enrolling in otherwise successful institutions. Put bluntly, these requirements could lead to irreparable financial and reputational harm to some HBCUs that are, in fact, providing quality educational opportunities to students. We look forward to working with the Department on regulations aimed at protecting students from bad actors, without harming HBCUs --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. SMITH: -- and other legitimate institutions that are working hard to bring educational opportunities to students. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Aaron Schenck.

MR. SHENCK: Good morning, everybody. My name is Aaron Schenck, and I'm the executive director of PAPSA. We represent over 100 technical colleges and trade schools in Pennsylvania. Our membership includes both for-profit and non-profit institutions. First, let me publicly thank the Department for the decision to hit the pause button on both the gainful employment and the borrower defense to repayment regs. While I know some people in this room disagree with that decision, the decision was responsible and needed. These regulations may have been well intentioned, but the end result was many hundreds of pages of new rules and red tape on schools, which have led to subsequent data problems, confusion on compliance matters, countless time, resources, and costs directed to regulatory affairs, and not in the classroom.

I've personally traveled all over Pennsylvania and have personally visited approximately 100 different college campuses in our state. I spent hundreds of hours meeting with students, veterans, graduates, teachers, administrators, employees, employers, and community leaders at these visits.

I've heard story after story about positive experiences that everyone's had at these schools, but unfortunately, at almost every institution I visited, I've also heard about the many problems they're experiencing with federal regulation. I've sat here for the last hour, heard a lot of people mention terms like predatory, abuse, and other terms. If that's happening at any school, then those need to be held accountable. I don't think anybody in this room would disagree with that. But there's effects to these regulations that are hitting the schools that are not bad actors. Let me give three quick examples. In Pennsylvania, we've had three of the oldest business colleges in the state, one 120 years old, one 150 years old, and one 130 years old, close their doors in the last two years.

These were not predatory, not bad actors, but all three cited excessive federal regulatory pressures as one of their top reasons for their decision to close. Next, in the survey of our schools, in our state, almost 40 percent of the respondents have reported some level of data problems they're experiencing with these regulations.

The worst cases of data problems I've seen include two separate small schools in Pennsylvania where the gainful employment loan data rate was double counted by the Department. This error caused a doubling of the debt-to-earnings ratio for these schools, placing most of their programs in the, quote, failing category for no other reason than a data error.

These schools still, to this day, are trying to work that problem out with the Department. My final example is that of one small, very niche school, that only teaches one program. It's a very popular program. It's so popular, it has a two-year waiting list to get into the school.

I've asked the owner, I said why haven't you expanded capacity to meet that demand? His answer is quite simple. He doesn't want to put financial capital into doing expansion of his school at a time he feels -- he's actually fearful of federal over-regulation.

These are just a few of many examples I can give on why these regulations need a pause and fix, but I know the goal of the hearing today is to get specific recommendations on how to improve them. Here's a brief summary of my suggestions, and I'll spend most of time on gainful employment.

My three things to improve the gainful employment reg include uniformity, transparency, and accuracy. Uniformity. First, apply the rule equally across all sectors of higher education. The existing rule is more punitive to schools registered for tax purposes as for-profit, while exempting out many programs at public institutions and non-profits, even though the latter educated a large majority of the population -- I believe the number's around 90 percent of higher ed students.

If the regulation that's developed here in these negotiated rulemakings is good public policy, and if this rule's about protecting students, then it should not arbitrarily leave out 90 percent of the students in the country out of these protections.

Second, the data calculations used in GE need to be consistent with other outcome calculations used in IPEDS, the college navigator, accreditors, etc. For example, the on-time graduation rate in the GE template is calculated differently than every other way the Department calculates on-time graduation rates.

For a tool to be fully transparent, it needs to have outcome measurements that are consistent across the board. Next, transparency. The existing regulation is punitive to students and institutions by threatening access to student aid. The new rulemaking should use this regulation more as a transparency tool, for students to make informed choices, not as a punitive weapon against certain careers. I say that because looking at the data from year one, the gainful employment reg does not measure academic quality of a program. It measures, basically, the reported earnings potentials for employees in specific career fields.

Here are some examples. Occupations that typically have low starting wages, but strong long-term wage potential, like culinary arts, are at a high risk of failing the metric. Another example is career fields that are tip based and have significantly unreported wages, like cosmetology and barber programs.

Another example are careers that work off commissions and are project based, that take a while to build a book of clients, like art schools, graphic design, and photography. These are great long-term careers, but have not fared well under the GE metric. My final example is programs where graduates accept low wages in exchange for free housing, food, and entertainment, like hospitality and hotel management programs. Graduates of these programs live on resorts and cruise ships, love their job, and get paid in the process, but these programs all get crushed by the GE metric. Due to the punitive nature of GE, these students could lose access to student aid. This is why the regulation should not be punitive --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. SHENCK: Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: You can take another 15-20 seconds to wrap up.

MR. SHENCK: All right, I'll just -- last point, accuracy. For a transparency tool to be useful, numbers being provided to students need to be accurate. Here are a few suggestions to help with that.

Provide schools additional opportunities to review and challenge data to show accuracy, consider ways to use BLS data on career fields' median and long-term earnings potentials, instead of individual student cohorts in their first three years of wages.

Provide schools better ways to appeal and ensure accuracy of the numbers through options like realistic student survey thresholds, employer verified data, state data, and/or data submitted to creditors. Two more. Provide ways to better account for tip-based professions that historically have unreported earnings, and provide schools the ability to provide a narrative in their disclosures explaining why a certain career field may have benefits that make the career attractive and rewarding beyond just the first three years' reported earnings statement.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. SHENCK: Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: S. Paul Mazza, III.

MR. MAZZA: Good morning. My name is Paul Mazza. I am the president of the South Hills School of Business and Technology in Central Pennsylvania. My parents founded the school in 1970, 47 years ago, in the shadow of the Pennsylvania State University.

As an attorney, my father struggled to find trained individuals to staff his law firm. In speaking with other attorneys and business leaders, he quickly saw the need for a school to prepare individuals with the skills to fill these critical jobs in the community. What began as a secretarial school now offers 11 AST and ASB degrees in business, technology, allied health, graphic arts, and criminal justice. Prior to his passing, my father traveled down to D.C., as I have done today, to speak in opposition to the first attempt at enacting regulations on gainful employment. He realized the harm this regulation would cause to small communities served by schools such as ours.

It threatened to destroy the educational opportunities available to many non-traditional, underserved members of those communities and severely curtail their ability to achieve their goals. In the years following his death, GE 2.0 was enacted and has now begun to drain the resources of schools across the nation.

Its stated purpose was to rein in poor-performing schools that saddled graduates with substantial debt and minimal earnings potential. It was claimed, at the time, that the evil for-profit schools were the worst offenders, and thus the regulation was targeted primarily at these schools. We now know that the data supporting this claim was flawed and that, in fact, graduates from schools such as ours were no more or less inclined to pay down their school loans, as were those graduating from any other school. I mentioned earlier that our school is located in the shadow of Penn State. Penn State is a fantastic school. It draws tens of thousands of prospects from all across the globe, graduates about half of them, and sends them off in search of their dreams, again, all across the globe.

Very few PSU grads stay in the Central Pennsylvania region. In contrast, South Hills draws tens of tens prospects from a ten-county area, graduates about 60 percent of them, and sends them out to employ their skills to help organizations within those communities from which they came. In fact, Penn State would have a very difficult time keeping their doors open were it not for South Hills graduates.

Penn State currently employs over 300 South Hills grads. Some of these graduates have been employed by the university for decades and currently hold high-level departmental positions, where they are now hiring recent South Hills grads. On a personal note, my 21-year-old son has completed six of seven terms in our school in the business administration management and marketing program. He has a 3.97 GPA, which I'm not sure how he did that. His seventh term, which he's in now, consists of a 378-hour internship program, the school sets up the internship programs for all of our soon-to-be graduates and ensures that they are placed in a viable educational internship.

He is fulfilling his internship requirements at Penn State's School of Hospitality Management. After three weeks, he has already proven himself to his internship supervisor and will likely be offered a wage payroll position within Penn State. Now, wage payroll has a certain cap of earnings.

It is unlikely that earnings cap that Penn State puts on their wage payroll employees would be sufficient to meet the metrics that were arbitrarily assigned in the gainful employment regulation.

With all of this, I would ask Secretary DeVos and the Department of Ed to simply dismantle the gainful employment regulations before it does -- or before they do any more damage. After 47 successful years and over 6,000 graduates, it would be unfortunate, indeed, if we were forced to close some of our programs due to the arbitrary metrics forced upon us by this onerous regulation.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. MAZZA: Thank you for allowing me to share my thoughts today.

MS. WEISMAN: Charles Long.

MR. LONG: Good morning. My name is Charles Long. I am the director of education for Pittsburgh Career Institute, located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. I'm here to speak to you about an area of the country which, according to the 2015 census, 12 percent of our population makes less than $10,000 a year. We have a minority and African-American population of 24.6 percent, and an unwed birth rate of 47 percent.

I give you these figures only to tell you that these are the lives that I change every day. I change these lives within regulations, and without predatory practices. Due to the high unemployment and stubborn skills gap, we are looking for qualified individuals to fill these positions. I believe that the Department should be judicious about issuing regulations that would reduce access to education and training for hundreds and thousands of Pittsburghers and Americans. There should be a reconsideration of the efforts to regulate private sector colleges, as well as community colleges, out of the higher education community.

The existing regulation is arbitrarily applied to schools based on tax status; whereas, schools registered as private for-profit are regulated more heavily than public and private non-profits, even though they educate about 90 percent of the higher education students nationally.

Many of these schools have similar programs that would fail GE metrics if they were placed upon them. I guess the question is why are we going to exempt approximately 90 percent of the students in the programs in the country of these protections? Along with this disparity, there's an overreach in regulation.

This questions arise to me about other sectors of education, which this does not touch. I, as well as everybody in here, have read about inflated tuition rates that have caused pause in the minds of Americans when it comes to Title IV issues. But I have to say why is my school, in particular, being put under the fire, when I'm held accountable to retain, graduate, and employ 70 percent of the students that I bring into my doors. I wish that this should apply to all institutions receiving Title IV.

Other issues that are apparent in the regulation is that it only looks at the first three years of wages, and not long-term earning potential in a career, as well as it does not account for geographic wage disparities, where graduates with the same credentials, education, and career can make significantly different wages, based on geography and economic conditions in different urban/suburban/rural communities in regions of the country.

The new GE rulemaking should look at earning potentials throughout a career and not just entry level of the first three years after graduation. The GE rule was originally intended to define two words, gainful employment, but this has turned into an 800-page regulation, with over 100 additional electronic announcements and other documents schools have to comply with. The significant time and burden upon staff that's put upon a school like mine, which happens to be what we term a mom-and-pop school, is significant. It takes so much time away from the education that we can deliver in the classrooms and helping the students get careers after they graduate. A lot of the schools that I hear that we are talking about up here, a lot of the bad actors, are no longer in business.

What this regulation is doing now is hurting the small, mom-and-pop schools, like mine, that are in business in Pittsburgh. We are the only career school left in Pittsburgh that happens to be a choice for students. Finally, when speaking about choices, if one of the goals of the regulation is not to have students graduate with debt loads that may not match their salary or potential, then the federal government should think more about curbing over-borrowing.

Access to federal student loans are currently issued like a right to students, and students are eligible to borrow more than they often need to finish their programs. Schools can do little or nothing to counsel or limit how much a student can borrow to complete the program. The new negotiated GE regulation should give the federal government or schools more control and the ability to help counsel students against over-borrowing. In conclusion, while I see and support the need for regulation, as it applies to Title IV, I believe the rules should be fair and unbiased, as to create a need for students to make an informed decision about their education. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: David Baime.

MR. BAIME: Good morning. My name is David Baime, and I'm senior vice president for government relations and policy analysis for the American Association of Community Colleges, very pleased to be here with you. We represent over 90 percent of all the nation's two-year public institutions, as well as non-profit two-year colleges, as well as a couple of four-year for-profit colleges, as well.

Want to make a few comments this morning. First of all, to represent my institutions accurately would say that when the gainful employment regulations were initially established and promulgated by the Department, there was a lot of interest, and even enthusiasm, about the role that the regulations would play in taking a tough look at programs, including community college programs, and trying to help institutions keep debt levels down. That interest in overarching goal remains with the institutions. The implementation of the regulations, the cost of implementing them, and the confusion that has hit the campuses has been a tremendous issue for the community colleges.

We're very much hoping that in the next iteration of this regulatory process, if the Department does undertake that and issues new final regulations, that there is a stronger emphasis on the institutional compliance costs for our colleges. I mentioned we think that overall, the concept of debt to earnings is probably a sound one for gainful employment.

I think, though, in the interests of being accurate about the policy environment for this, the gainful employment definition was written by Congress in 1972. It has not been meaningfully reviewed by the legislature since that time. We think that in an ideal world, Congress would take a look at this and would debate this, along with the Department of Education, and give some guidance to the Department about exactly what it wants the Department to do. But in the absence of that, we think that it's incumbent upon the Department to move ahead with new, clear regulations in this area. Also want to point out most people don't associate community college students with borrowing; however, over 20 percent of all of our students, or about 20 percent of our students, credit students, borrow, and almost 40 percent of all of our full-time students take out loans.

Even though, again, we're not necessarily associated with loans, the issue of student debt and default for community colleges and limiting student debt, where students can't manage it, is of a very high priority for our organization.

In terms of some of the information and disclosures that are generated through the last -- the gainful employment 2.0, as it was just said, this, too, has been problematic for community colleges because of all the information that they've had to upload to the Department and report, on the one hand, with, on the other hand, very little information being actually generated through that because of small classes in our technical programs, the programs that have fallen under the gainful employment rubric. The other thing that we feel very strongly about is that the gainful employment statute, as far as we can tell, was never envisioned to be a major disclosure requirement, reporting requirement disclosure scheme.

If you're going to require certain types of information to be disclosed, as has been the case under gainful employment, it's the type of information, for the most part, that should be provided for all programs across higher education, not just gainful employment programs.

My organization has put forward a series of legislative proposals based on a unit record data system that would enable institutions to easily report, through that unit record data system, completion and progression information, transfer information, so that we have a better understanding of our overall system, and then wages and earnings once people have completed their college educations and gone out to the workforce.

We don't think that these earning information should be at all limited to gainful employment programs. The last speaker talked a little bit about the burden of the regulation. I mentioned it, too. Department of Education has issued, in addition to the voluminous regulations, themselves, 106 communications to colleges under these regulations since the first set of them were come out. It's unconscionable, from our perspective.

Colleges do comply with these regulations, but it's been enormous effort from them to do that. We've consistently heard from our campuses about the confusion, the uncertainty, the cost, and just the sheer difficulty of them to comply with these regulations, so we urge the department, as it moves forward in this area, to again be very sensitive to this.

We also think, though, that given the nature of the SULA requirements and the enrollment information that institutions provide, there ought to be an easier way, a more efficient way, also using the Title IV data that colleges report, to generate some of the information that the Department has previously required, assuming that will be required in the future.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. BAIME: Thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to be with you this morning.

MS. WEISMAN: That concludes our speakers for this session, for this part of the morning session. We will take a break until 10:40. Again, we'll start back promptly at 10:40.

(Whereupon, the above-entitled matter went off the record at 10:27 a.m. and resumed at 10:41 a.m.)

MS. WEISMAN: We do have a full agenda through lunchtime. We will take a break for lunch at 12:00 noon. To get started again, we'd like to call John Kamin.

MR. KAMIN: Good morning. On behalf of National Commander Charles E. Schmidt and the 2.1 million members of the American Legion, I thank you for the time to speak during this hearing. As the largest veterans' organization in the country, we do not come here with an ideological agenda. We're not interested in attacking one sector of higher education or another, but rather to ask the Department of Education a simple question. Will it continue to protect veterans and service members transitioning to higher education, completing degree programs, and obtaining career-ready skills? If so, how? We can report that it is a fact that veterans are often singled out and targeted with deceptive, fraudulent, and predatory college recruiting practices.

The Eisenhower administration first discovered this with the original GI Bill, and the phenomenon continues 73 years later. As the drafters of the original GI Bill, the American Legion's abiding imperative has been to promote policies that ensure that every single veteran or service member who enrolls in higher education graduates with a credential or degree that is worth the cost and leads to meaningful employment, which will allow them to lead a successful life after their time in the service.

We will continue to assert that the Department of Education has a critical responsibility to enforce policies and rules that protect America's veterans and service members, especially from schools and programs that will leave them in deep debt for worthless degrees, do not lead to gainful employment, and recruit using fraudulent claims. As a membership-based organization, all of our positions are derived from resolutions passed by our legionnaires. In accordance with Resolution No. 318, ensuring the quality of service member and veteran student education at institutions of higher education, we have three requests for the Department of Education as it's rewriting its rules.

No. 1, veterans must be included on any new negotiated rulemaking committee, as they have been for previous negotiations. We are happy to work with the Department and other VSOs to find negotiators who can accurately represent our unique experiences. No. 2, the Department must maintain strong rules to ensure that veterans and service members are gainfully employed.

We supported the gainful employment rules, as they were written, and we urge the Department to start the next round of gainful employment immediately. Programs that fail to prepare our members for gainful employment do not deserve taxpayers' or our veterans' dollars. Additionally, we are disappointed in the Department's decision to delay gainful employment disclosure requirements. With all the aggressive recruiting and predatory marketing that exists, disclosures ensure that our members know whether a degree is worth paying for, so they can be empowered to make informed decisions.

This consumer information needs to prominently be on school websites, in their advertising and enrollment materials, because our members deserve the right to know what they are paying for. Regardless of the sector, we want to champion the schools that demonstrate their value.

The Department needs to immediately enforce this section of the rule. In fact, in new rulemaking, the Department should consider ways to ensure that these disclosures specifically mention the debt, completion, and earnings outcomes of veterans and service members.

No. 3, the Department must have effective rules to help defrauded veterans and service members get full debt relief. Thousands of veterans have been defrauded over the years, promised their credits would transfer when they wouldn't, given false or misleading job placement rates in marketing, promised one educational experience when they were recruited, but given something completely different. This type of deception against our veterans and service members is unfair and shameful.

We also support key provisions in the current rule, including the standard for misrepresentation and automatic closed discharges after three years, simply because these provisions create the easiest path to relief for veterans when their school closes.

We believe there should be a process for group relief, so that in instances of widespread fraud, or when a state attorney general is acting on behalf of our members, veterans don't have to jump through a bunch of hoops, fill out unnecessary government paperwork, or participate in complicated bureaucratic hearings to get their loans forgiven.

Finally, the Department needs to implement the borrower defense rules that they delayed. This delay means that veterans who started school this fall could still be forced to sign predatory arbitration agreements. That's unacceptable. As we speak, thousands of pending applications for relief, including many of the veterans who attended schools like ITT Tech or Corinthian, remain unopened. These are the people who are left holding the tab as these questions are litigated today.

Until every veteran's application for a loan discharge has been processed, the American Legion will continue to demand accountability. We look forward to working with the Department of Education to correct these issues. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: William Hubbard.

MR. HUBBARD: Good morning. On behalf of Student Veterans of America, a higher ed non-profit representing 1.1 million veterans in post-secondary education, I stand before you strongly urging this body to stand with students and fully implement the borrower defense negotiated rule. My name is Will Hubbard.

I am a former chapter leader of Student Veterans of America at American University, and now serve on the national headquarters staff, as vice president of government affairs. I also served as a non-federal negotiator in the original borrower defense rulemaking in 2015, representing the perspective of our military connected students. With rumors of these hard-won victories to protect students being at risk, we delivered a letter this spring on behalf of dozens of military, veteran, and family organizations to the chairman of the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, and the House Education Workforce Committee.

In this letter, we identified four protections that our community is committed to fighting for, and more so today than ever. First, the gainful employment rule, which enforces the Higher Education Act's requirement that a career education program receiving federal student aid must prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation.

This common sense requirement applies to career education programs of all types of colleges and protects both students and taxpayers from fraud, waste, and abuse. Veterans express anger when they discover that the government knew a career education program had a bad record, but allowed them to waste valuable GI Bill benefits at such a school. Second, new regulations on the federal student relief for defrauded borrowers and college accountability, which make it harder for schools to hide from and clarify avenues for students to receive loan relief they are entitled to under the Higher Education Act. America's heroes are targeted for fraud because of the 90/10 loophole, and they deserve relief they're entitled to under the law.

Third, the ban on incentive compensation in the Higher Education Act, which was enacted more than 20 years ago, with broad bipartisan support, to reduce high-pressure, deceptive sales tactics and sales commissions incentivizing college recruiters to do anything or say anything to get veterans to enroll. Veterans who are frequently encouraged to enroll on the spot are particularly vulnerable to high-pressure recruiting.

Over 60 percent are first-generation college students. Fourth, the enforcement unit at the Department, which has been taking active steps to protect all students and explicitly embrace the goal of prioritizing veterans and service members. I must be frank with this body. What exactly is up for debate today? Some have called the previous rulemaking a muddled process, a comment which deserves open scorn for its sheer ignorance, at the very least. Is this Department interested in protecting students, or is it interested in protecting companies? As you linger on that question, consider for a moment the implementation of these students' protections.

It should be openly embraced by schools that have strong outcomes.

These protections only negatively affect schools who are committed to defrauding taxpayers, students, and the broader American public. As institutions who have spent millions of marketing dollars cultivating the image that they are different, why, now, are they asking to be treated like all other schools? Who's being fooled by that? I'll tell you what.

We ought to relabel these predatory schools as bakeries because they've been having their cake and eating it, too, and they've been doing so for decades. The biggest loser in this scenario of reduced student protections are actually the schools that are doing it right. Many for-profits have strong programs, with good outcomes, but they get the short end of the stick, as such predatory programs continues to cheat the system. They've cheated veterans, their families, and indeed, they've cheated capitalism, itself. The Department's stay of this rule deprives states and students of protections and enforcement mechanisms that were developed out of a consensus-driven process, with all parties at the table.

On behalf of national organizations representing our nation's military service members, veterans, survivors, and military families, I vehemently urge you to ensure that important laws and regulations protecting students are not watered down or eliminated. We hope that an agreement is possible, in order to protect America's military heroes and their families. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Jeff Arthur.

MR. ARTHUR: I'm Jeff Arthur, with ECPI University. Our university's fifth in the nation in the number of undergraduate computer science degrees awarded, and we award 2 percent of all such degrees awarded to African-Americans. As we reconsider these regulations, I hope we can focus on solutions that help all prospective students take a more informed approach to higher education decision making, as they invest their precious time and resources. Much of the data available in the current gainful employment regulations, the College Scorecard database, which has over 1,500 fields -- many people don't realize that -- College Navigator, IPEDS, and other sources have the potential to help many optimize their higher education choices.

To be of any assistance, though, this data must be available across all programs and all institutions. I'm certain that the vast majority of persons entering higher education are doing so in hopes it will lead them to gainful employment. If data that measures gainful employment is only available for 10 percent of higher education, it truly becomes ineffective, as opportunities for comparison are very limited.

What is important to students varies greatly. For some, especially adult students, time to completion is of utmost importance. For others, the total cost of the program, based on actual completion time, may be most important. For most, the success rates and employment outcomes of graduates is certainly important. I think we should take approach, let's embrace the College Scorecard database as the platform to publish gainful employment related metrics. Add program-level and military flags to the data already there, which now does include much data related to gainful employment, including salary information. Student loan records already include program information at the student level. It's already collected.

Enhance the database with other data that correlates to gainful employment, such as time to completion data, debt to earnings calculations with various time frames, recognizing the value of a degree is not determined in two and a half years. The total cost and debt, based on median time to completion -- this is by program, by institution.

The number of graduates by program, which is currently available in IPEDS. Finally, employment rates. Let's require programs subject to gainful employment to refer prospects to gainful employment related data identified as such in the College Scorecard. Let's enhance the College Scorecard platform to allow users to identify and compare information that's important to them. Do not make determinations on absolute eligibility requirements for eligibility until such time as better data is available for all of higher education, or until Congress better defines their intent. As we're increasingly exposed to various measures of student success, any regulation must consider that there clearly are programmatic, geographical, and demographic influences.

We must be careful not to limit educational opportunities. As the CIO of a medium-sized institution, who has directly programmed or supervised IPEDS reporting for over 25 years, I attest that reporting can be streamlined in an efficient manner. Much of the data needed to make these calculations, at least on Title IV eligible cohorts, is already being collected. We are in an era of big data.

Many institutions are implementing big data solutions that are ingesting a plethora of data to help make faculty more effective and students more successful. We can report most any data that would be useful in a consumer information platform. Once you have scripts to extract data on a few programs, the effort to expand reporting to all programs does not require significant additional efforts. The current reporting requirements for GE programs are exponentially more complex than necessary and highly prone to reporting mistakes and errors in interpretation. They could have been done much simpler.

Additionally, I believe there's an opportunity in the gainful employment rulemaking to consider formalizing guidance to be given to allow institutions to award recommended loan amounts over full loan amounts. Giving institutions tools to better award and counsel students on debt will help their ability to be gainful employed with manageable debt.

Given that the vast majority of programs subject to the gainful employment requirements and statute are offered by proprietary colleges, the committee assigned to negotiate these regulations should include representation from different types of proprietary colleges. It's not possible to pick one person to represent the interests of all proprietary colleges. In borrower defense, I believe we've got an opportunity -- it seems the HEA would permit rules that would provide for partial loan forgiveness. I don't believe it should be interpreted as all or nothing. Students borrow vastly varied amounts for the same program. Some may take considerable amounts for necessary living expenses we all have, whether attending college or not.

Consideration should be given for the value of college credits and degrees earned, employment gained, and other benefits of having attended college, despite a legitimate fraud-based claim. Let's ensure when a claim is granted, it is to the extent there is demonstrated harm. Thank you for the opportunity to make comments.

MS. WEISMAN: Betsy Mayotte.

MS. MAYOTTE: Good morning. My name is Betsy Mayotte, and I am the director of consumer outreach and compliance in the Center for Consumer Advocacy at American Student Assistance. ASA is a non-profit who has been helping students realize their higher education dreams in a financially responsible way for over 60 years. I was also one of the negotiators in the prior negotiated rulemaking session that addressed the borrower defense to repayment rules. I'd like to start by thanking the Department for their dedication to the negotiated rulemaking process. I frequently say that helping students navigate their student debt is a team sport. Involving the various affected constituencies in the rulemaking process is the only way to ensure the rules are as fair and effective as they can be.

I saw an article in the Chronicle of Higher Education a few weeks ago that quoted an industry policy expert, who stated that the process was deeply dull. While I wouldn't have called the last borrower defense negotiated rulemaking session dull, I can assure you that the old saying goes, nothing worth having comes easy.

The regulations that came out of the last session were not only rules worth having, they were rules worth keeping if want to fulfill our responsibility of protecting students, families, schools, and the U.S. taxpayer. At the outset, I'd like to express my disappointment in the postponement of the borrower defense to repayment rule. The rule wasn't perfect, but keeping it in place while the new negotiated rulemaking session was going forward would have allowed us to see more clearly what fixes needed to be made, while not forcing borrowers to wait even longer for relief. As Cardinal Newman once said, nothing would be done at all if man waited until he could do it so well that no one could find fault with it.

The same could be said for this rule and for the gainful employment rule, which ASA will also be submitting written comments on later. I've been a negotiator in multiple negotiated rulemaking sessions and attended most of them for the past 15 years or so. I'll be the first to say that the DTR rule, at its base, is a complex issue. For that reason, I urge the Department to restrict the agenda for this particular session to DTR alone.

Allowing the negotiators to focus on DTR and the subset of issues contained within DTR will help to ensure a meaningful outcome and show the Department's commitment to success. Additionally, I strongly recommend that the next session continue the discussion from where the last negotiated rulemaking left off and try to improve the most recent final rule. There was a lot of hard work done in the last session, and while time did not allow us to come to consensus, the conversations we had were valuable, as were the public comments submitted as a result of the NPRM. It would be a waste and, in my opinion, setting the upcoming neg reg for failure to start the new session from scratch.

Before I speak about particular nuances in the final rule, I'd like to point out a myth about the DTR rule that has been perpetuated both in the press, by people that have spoken here today, and by other industry participants. The DTR rule is not aimed at for-profit schools, nor is it designed to be a penalty to any particular school type.

It's protection for borrowers and, with a few minor exceptions, the rule applies equally to all school types. Calling it a for-profit rule distracts us from the point of the DTR regulations, which is to protect all students, regardless of what kind of school they attend, from predatory practices. I've been in the industry for more years than I care to admit, and I can tell you that I've seen excellent outcomes from all school types, and fraudulent behaviors from all school types. Fraud is committed by greedy and dishonest people, and greedy and dishonest people can and do work in all sectors. This rule does not aim to target for-profit schools, and should apply to every school type, as the recent final rule did. The argument that this rule would result in schools closing is also inaccurate.

With, perhaps, one exception regarding pending lawsuits, the final DTR rule does not contain anything that will put a transparent institution with robust educational programs at risk. To put it bluntly, if you're not doing anything wrong, if you are working to protect the best interests of your student borrowers, the rule will not result in your school closing.

The rule is also intended to protect the U.S. taxpayer from having to foot the bill when such fraudulent activities occur. This is another important aspect that is often overlooked when discussing the borrower defense rule. We all know about the Corinthian College debacle that started our discussions on borrower defense to repayment, but did you know that this case, alone, cost the U.S. taxpayers over $500 million? That's enough for Pell grants for 103,000 low-income students; $500 million would also fund the GEAR UP program, which is slated for a 30 percent reduction in funding by the current administration's recent budget proposal. This was just one school.

In 2012, Florida institution FastTrain Corporation was found to have fraudulently originated loans for students with no high school diploma or equivalent. That amounted to over $4 million in fraudulent loans and $2 million in fraudulent Pell grants.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. MAYOTTE: In 2016, Massachusetts American Career Institute admitted defrauding students to the turn of $30 million. Time flies when you're having fun, doesn't it? We'll submit the remainder of our comments in written format, but the bottom line of our position is that the majority of the DTR rule that was made last year should remain.

It should remain during the current negotiated rulemaking process. The key aspects of this rule will continue to be important, regardless of the outcome of this session. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: John Galgano.

MR. GALGANO: Good morning. My name is John Galgano. I am the chief of staff and general counsel for the American Musical and Dramatic Academy, or AMDA, for short. AMDA is both a college and conservatory for the performing arts, offering students the option of earning a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in music theater, acting, dance theater, or the performing arts, or the option of completing a rigorous course of study in our two-year conservatory program in either musical theater, dance, or acting.

AMDA is a not-for-profit post-secondary institution in existence for 53 years, with campuses in New York City and Hollywood, offering our students unique access to the entertainment capitals of the world, while being taught by accomplished faculty members who are working professionals in the performing arts industry.

In short, AMDA is continually and consistently educating this country's next generation of singers, dancers, actors, and performing artists. AMDA quite literally helps populate the Broadway stage. In the last two years, AMDA has had over 60 alumni grace the stages of Broadway. Two of our esteemed young alumni were cast in the history making Broadway musical Hamilton. Christopher Jackson and Anthony Ramos originated the roles of George Washington and John Laurens, Philip Hamilton.

AMDA represents a part of American culture that we all hold dear, the arts. Since opening our doors to students in 1964, AMDA has been a sine qua non for the musical theater world. Quite literally, without AMDA, the entertainment world would not be the same.

For over half a century, AMDA has been committed to providing a rigorous performing arts training to a very diverse student body, which includes such iconic and influential artists as Paul Sorvino, Tyne Daly, Jesse Tyler Ferguson, and Jason Derulo, just to name a few.

While we are proud of our accomplished alumni and our wonderful working faculty, we are also humbled by the importance of our mission. With this picture of our school in mind, we are here today expressing our support for a new rulemaking process on gainful employment. We need to get this process right this time, or this well-intentioned regulation may end up regulating schools like ours, non-profits that have served tens of thousands of students dedicated to theater, dance, and the arts, right out of existence.

AMDA has two programs which finished in the zone on last year's initial gainful employment metrics, with one finishing very close, at 8.1 percent of annual debt to earnings. Title IV aid is critical for our students to cover the cost of college. Without it, this 53-year-old not-for-profit institution would be forced to close. I don't think that was the intention of this regulation.

The application of debt-to-earnings tests in the gainful employment rule make little sense for our music, dance, acting, and theater students. For them, the long and storied path for even our very best students is the well-chronicled life of an artist that they know awaits them from day one, part-time employment at night and on weekends, and audition after audition during the day. This part-time, often out of field employment requires them to make financial sacrifices in the early years of their career. This purposefully means putting off longer-term, more stable employment in the short term to follow their careers in the arts. The pay is often low, the hours long, and there is no guarantee of success, but this is what our students have signed up for.

They know what they are getting into. A very important note is that AMDA's student loan default rate is 3.4 percent. It's extraordinarily low. Our students successfully pay back the loans they've taken out to get the training they need by attending our school. We know that the path of the performing artist is a difficult one, and we work hard to help our students manage financial challenges.

We specifically advise students of their likely post-graduation financial situation when they enroll. Additionally, we have post-graduation assistance designed to help our students find part-time employment. Very simply, the earnings that our graduates make in the first few years after leaving our school are not indicative of their earning or employment potential throughout their lives. This has been the formula that has worked for students who have attended our school for the past 50 years. No matter how well-intentioned this regulation is, fancy new metrics from Washington bureaucracies cannot measure the success or failure of our school and our students, and we respectfully ask for this regulation to take the unique needs of our students into account.

If future versions of gainful employment are to apply to certificate programs like those at our school, the rules should recognize the difference in how our graduates will earn their living versus those graduating from other schools and other programs, who can more readily find long-term, high-paying employment.

As the Department considers who may serve on a negotiated rulemaking committee on these issues, AMDA also stands ready to serve, to ensure the needs of our students are recognized in any new rule. Thank you for considering our views today.

MS. WEISMAN: Neal Heller.

MR. HELLER: Good morning. My name is Neal Heller, and I'm here today representing the American Association of Cosmetology Schools. We have over 600 member schools across the country. I'm also the owner of Hollywood Institute of Beauty Careers, which is a company that owns three cosmetology schools in the State of Florida.

We want to thank the Department today and applaud your courage in re-opening the rulemaking process for what we would consider to be ill-conceived and poorly crafted gainful employment and borrower defense to repayment rules. We all agree that students should be protected against fraudulent practices, misleading practices, illegal practices.

However, as the gentleman before me has clearly stated, these rules do not accomplish that purpose and, in many cases, are putting good, decent schools out of business. In the face of relentless pressure from certain members of Congress, ideologues from the previous administration and U.S. Department of Education, and their friends in the media, it is truly commendable to re-open a dialogue that so desperately needs to take place in a more fair and balanced environment. An example of unfair media coverage can be found in today's Washington Post, in an article which merely echoes a New York Times article and editorial of several weeks ago. Today's article states, quote, 98 percent of the programs that fail to meet gainful employment standards are offered by for-profit colleges.

Wouldn't it have been nice of the reporter to have added that 98 percent of the programs under gainful employment are only offered at for-profit colleges, a little perspective on the subject? This type of misleading, deceptive reporting would have landed the Washington Post in hot water under the current borrower defense to repayment rule.

Perhaps I should demand my $2 back for today's edition, and then perhaps we should a letter out to every single subscriber and buyer of the Washington Post today and ask them to simply check a box if they'd like their money back, as well. That is how ludicrous the currently written borrower defense to repayment rule is, as it stands. Some other perspective on gainful employment. Somehow, if a student, a graduate, doesn't earn any money, that zero counts in the calculation. Yet, in the same calculation, if a graduate from that cohort didn't borrow any money to go to school, that zero doesn't count.

Another example of the unfairly written way gainful employment came out in its final rendition, it also dismissed the Department's own words in the preamble, which stated clearly that they know certain earnings data is flawed, i.e. for cosmetology schools and cosmetology related programs.

Yet, it took a lawsuit from AACS to get that, now, turned around, so that the Department has the opportunity to rewrite the earnings requirements and the appeals requirement under gainful employment which, again, I commend the Department for extending that to all schools.

Again, we talked about simply borrower defense to repayment, where you simply check a box, if you get a letter in the mail, if you want relief on your student loan. You don't even have to say why, just check the box. One validated claim results in the Department sending out that letter to every single graduate of that program, at that school, asking them to check that box, and that one validated claim also results in the school having to post, in some cases, multimillion dollar letters of credit. There was also no appeals process for the erroneous data, such as interest rates that were being used by the Department.

In my case, the median student had a 6.8 interest rate used on the debt calculation, when only one third of her debt was at 6.8 percent. Two thirds was at 3.5 percent. Thus, that program would have been a passing program, instead of being in the zone, had the Department used real interest rates across the board.

Some recommendations. On-time completion rates, revise the GE template, public and not-for-profit schools get six years to graduate their students in four-year programs. Why not us?

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. HELLER: 150 percent is exactly the calculation that's used in financial aid. We'll have other recommendations, but I guess I won't get to them. I think all schools should be judged fairly and equally, regardless of their tax status. Judge us on performance, and thank you very much for doing what you're doing. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Donna Waite.

MS. WAITE: Thank you for granting me a few minutes to speak here today. My name is Donna Waite. I'm a Paul Mitchell school owner, and I'm also the president of the Franchisee Association. I represent, standing here today, 112 schools across our nation. I'm also the co-owner of several Paul Mitchell schools located in Idaho, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and California.

I have come here to express support for the Department's efforts to review the regulations pertaining to both the borrower defense to repayment and gainful employment. I also support the proposal to establish two new committees to review, revise, draw up new regulations, or perhaps eliminate those established under the previous administration.

When the current rules for gainful employment were being written, and before they were finalized, members of our association informed the Department the cosmetology sector was much different from other for-profit schools, largely because our graduates rely on tips, and are often paid in cash. As a result, we said that the data the government would rely on for gainful employment for cosmetology schools would be inaccurate and unreliable. Our real-world experience has proven that to be the case.

Fortunately, our corporate partners at Paul Mitchell helped us navigate the Department's troublesome compliance website and assisted us in setting up a system to interview over 2,000 graduates of our schools for programs that were in the zone or failing. From that experience, we learned that graduates from those schools under-reported their income by an average of 65.5 percent.

That is a huge margin of error, an error that has, in turn, cost our franchise owners and corporate partners hundreds of thousands of dollars, as we work to comply with the Department's compliance and appeals process. To us, it seems like a very expensive and cumbersome paperwork and compliance nightmare. But our schools are lucky. After our interviews were made, nearly all our schools moved into the passing grade, and a few moved from failing into the zone. None of these appealing remained in the failing category. Unfortunately, many small mom-and-pop cosmetology schools that don't have a corporate partner, as we do, have had to evaluate whether they could take current employees away from their normal responsibilities to work on this expensive compliance nightmare. We suspect many gave up and closed their doors.

We know they did. Although this hearing comes too late for the owners who've given up, I am grateful that Secretary DeVos and her team have undertaken to review the impact of these regulations. For the record, as I said, there are 112 Paul Mitchell schools located in 39 states, nearly all of them are owned by small business people like me.

According to publicly available information, a typical owner will invest $1 million to $2 million to establish a school. Our owners are generally not wealthy. Many mortgage their homes to establish a school or invest their life savings in a school. We refer to our students as future professionals, a term chosen to inspire them to greatness within the cosmetology industry. Last year, over 9,600 future professionals graduated from Paul Mitchell schools, and we ended the year with over 13,000 students enrolled. Of our graduates, 97 percent receive their state licenses each year. Nationwide, we have a job placement rate of 77 percent. That means that nearly 8 out of 10 Paul Mitchell graduates have a job as soon as they graduate.

Perhaps more importantly, from a taxpayer perspective, our graduates have a student loan repayment rate that is better than the national average for all institutions. Put another way, our student default rate in 2013 was 10.6 percent. That's better than the average for-public institutions and better than the average for those who attended proprietary, for-profit schools.

The only group that beats us are the private schools, such as Harvard, Yale, Notre Dame, and Stanford. You can see data in my written testimony to support that. Despite the fact that our students have a better than average student loan repayment rate, when the gainful employment assessments were sent out by the Department of Education, 58 of our 112 Paul Mitchell schools had a program in the zone or failing. That doesn't make sense to us. Clearly, if our graduates are repaying their loans, they're not being hurt by the cost of the education we provide. That is why we support the Department's review of gainful employment regulations and the establishment of the two committees. Speaking to --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. WAITE: -- two committees, let me briefly address the borrower defense to repayment. Simply put, we believe the whole regulation should be reworked. As an owner of a school, I have a lot of compliance that I'm held to, placement rate, completion, licensure, payment of loans that they have to do. I'm trying to put my arms around, now, why I'm also held accountable to what my graduates are reporting on their income tax --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. WAITE: -- as reported income. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Christopher Walck.

MR. WALCK: Good morning. My name is Christopher Walck, and I am the director of public relations for John Paul Mitchell Systems. I'm here representing various Paul Mitchell cosmetology schools owned by JPMS, and as a part of the Paul Mitchell Franchisee Association, which is comprised of 112 schools across the United States. With this nationwide network of schools in 39 states, Paul Mitchell cosmetology schools graduate nearly 10,000 qualified cosmetologists each year.

The gainful employment and borrower defense to repayment regulations have been of concern to the Paul Mitchell schools since their inception. While we understand that there may have been legitimate motivations for the Department to promulgate these rules, we feel that they are heavy handed, overly burdensome, and over reaching in many ways.

Let me first begin by discussing gainful employment. At the time gainful employment regulations were published, the Department stated that the primary purpose of the rule was to protect students at career colleges from becoming burdened by student loan debt they cannot repay. However, we have felt, from the beginning, that there was a much better way to evaluate how graduates are able to repay their student loans by using existing cohort default rates. Many of our students are non-traditional students, whether it is because they started their program with the intention of only working part time to supplement their family's income, or have a change in life circumstances, such as having a baby, that pushes them to drop to part-time status, or to stop working altogether.

Many make these decisions knowing that they will be able to still sufficiently cover their student loan debt. However, their choice of part-time employment brings down the students' debt-to-income ratio when compounded by others in the same situation, which can significantly bring down a school's GE ratio.

Based on the gainful employment rates released by the Department in January, 58 of the 112 Paul Mitchell cosmetology schools either had a program that failed or were in the zone. Many of these schools took advantage of the costly and burdensome earnings appeal process, and 41 of the schools have now reached the 50 percent threshold that was required under the process. Our GE ratios were based on annual earnings data that averaged $15,410 for each graduate. However, as Donna stated earlier, our survey data shows the annual average earnings of $25,498, a 65.5 percent increase.

Interesting enough, in the recent opinion for the American Association of Cosmetology Schools case, Judge Contreras noted that the Department acknowledged that the data was flawed when it stated that it was aware that some self-employed individuals may fail to report or under-report their earnings, and that experts submitted evidence that tip income and self-employment income are under-reported as much as 60 percent in the cosmetology industry.

It is clear that the Department must do something to improve the accuracy of the data that it's using to hold schools accountable. The Department cannot argue that the earnings appeals process is sufficient to overcome the inaccuracies in the earnings data.

On average, these appeal surveys cost each of our schools participating more than $13,000 in hard costs and countless hours of personal time to conduct the survey. Carried across our network of schools, the cost came to more than a half a million dollars, not to mention the over-reaching costs of complying with burdensome gainful employment regulations. These are all resources that should be devoted to improving our students' educational experience. Lastly, we feel that it's unfair to hold career colleges to a different standard to that of non-profit colleges and universities.

If debt-to-income ratio is so important for the protection of higher education students, then it should be applied to all educational programs equally. To do otherwise reflects a bias and agenda against for-profit schools that cannot stand. Now let me turn to borrower defense to repayment.

The most significant concern in the regulation is the potential requirement for debilitating financial security, such as letter of credit for a variety of triggers. While the final rule provides some relief by giving the Department discretion to not only require financial security above 10 percent of the previous year's income from federal student loans in some instances, this leaves schools without a clear understanding of the potential financial impact. However, this is not all. We are troubled that the regulation puts the Department into a prosecutorial and judicial role in bringing the action, and then deciding the outcome, which creates a conflict of interest.

We are troubled by the fact that students are happy with their education experience may be incorporated into another student's action at the discretion of the Department, without the satisfied student's input.

Finally, we are troubled that the regulation removes statutes of limitation for the discharge of borrower loan balances, the lack of which will impede fairness of any proceedings against a school. To conclude, both regulations are harmful to the higher education institutions and need to be repealed or undergo significant revisions.

We are grateful for the Department's action and would like to be a part of the negotiated rulemaking process to lend our voice towards making appropriate decisions regarding these important issues. We would like to ask the Department to, where appropriate --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. WALCK: -- rely on student loan default rates and student outcomes in the areas of completion, placement, and licensure, to evaluate the effectiveness of educational programs.

MS. WEISMAN: Marc M. Jerome.

MR. JEROME: Good morning. My name is Marc Jerome. I'm the president of Monroe College, in the Bronx, New York. Reflecting our community in the Bronx, most of the 8,000 students that we educate are first-generation college students, and we have worked very hard to have among the best outcomes in the country in graduate rates, default rates, and earnings.

I was a member of the 2013 GE Negotiated Rulemaking Committee, and I've spent, actually, the last eight, maybe ten years with a team of six people at Monroe living and breathing issues related to debt-to-earnings, repayment rates, and cost of attendance which, as you can imagine, makes me the life of every cocktail party I go to. I'm going to talk a little bit differently than most of the speakers. First, I think most of the speakers who have been speaking on behalf of borrowers have been conflating behavior of institutions with outcomes. So I'm asking the Department to focus on data when they go forward. One thing that hasn't been mentioned -- and the phrase I use is that the silence is deafening -- when you look at data across all of higher education, outcomes for low-income students, whether it's graduation rates or student debt or earnings, are generally abysmal.

What's happened is the focus on one particular subset of colleges has caused both the entire journalistic community, and some of the regulatory community, to forget that the Department is responsible for protecting all students. I'll just give a few examples. I believe there are over 2 million students attending institutions where less than 10 percent of students graduate on time.

In fact, in New York City, where I work, there are many institutions where on-time graduation rates are below 5 percent, and sometimes below 1 percent, and yet, these institutions are either not subject to gainful employment, or the way it's written, they would have passed it because gainful employment has no graduation rate. Default rates, you'd think sometimes that student default is only happening in one sector. Actually, there are over 1,000 institutions in the whole country where more than 20 percent, that's 1 in 5, default. My second request is that the Department revisits the data. I actually am looking for someone in the journalism world to take on this challenge.

I'll start with GE. When I was a negotiator with GE, I was certain the Department was holding information that showed debt-to-earnings for for-profit programs were much worse than not-for-profit. I made a formal request to see that data. That request was denied.

Since the GE rule has been passed, though, there's much more data that's surfaced that should give the Department pause to really look at whether or not the GE metrics are correct. First, there's terrific programmatic data from the University of Texas that is insightful both on the 8 percent and 12 percent rate. Second, the Scorecard now has the most comprehensive data on institutional debt-to-earnings and repayment rates. I'm understanding that the Department is starting to put together, finally, programmatic information on both debt-to-earnings. As far as I know, that data has never seen the light of day. On repayment rates, which is my second topic, a year ago, I came to the suspicion that the Scorecard was incorrect.

I contacted the Department, and eventually, the Department recognized that the Scorecard repayment rates were incorrect. The issue with both debt-to-earnings and repayment rates is this. If these metrics were ever applied across all sectors of higher education, I believe they would show that millions of students are attending programs that would fail these metrics, especially institutions that serve low-income students.

Said a little more bluntly, if the rules were applied across all sectors, there would be thousands of program closures and many institutional closures. In fact, if you go to the Scorecard data on the historically Black colleges and universities, which were referred to earlier, you would see that if the rules were applied to them, they would be decimated. Almost all of them would have to close. So I will end with -- because my time is up -- that if the Department looks at the data and really looks at it across all segments --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. JEROME: -- of higher education, it will inform a much better rule. Thank you very much.

MS. WEISMAN: Donna Stelling-Gurnett.

MS. STELLING-GURNETT: Good morning, and thank you for this opportunity to present this testimony on behalf of the Association of Proprietary Colleges. My name is Donna Stelling-Gurnett, and I'm the president of the association. APC was founded in 1978 and represents the interests of the degree granting proprietary sector in New York State.

We wish to thank the Department for pausing and taking the time to appropriately reflect on the gainful employment rule and the borrower defense to repayment regulations in an effort to verify that these regulations actually accomplish what they were intended to do. I would like to take a few moments to discuss ideas we would like to see incorporated during the upcoming regulatory processes on these issues. Let's start with the gainful employment rule. While our membership has always agreed with the stated aim to ensure that students enrolled in certain higher education programs receive a quality education that adequately prepares them for gainful employment, we have questioned the relevance of the metrics that the regulation relies on to assess program value and have argued that they are unrealistic and politically biased.

The GE rule is incredibly complicated and ambiguous, so much so that the Department had significant difficulty in implementing it. APC and our member colleges have the highest regard for the competency of the Department staff. However, when the Department originally published the draft GE rates in 2011, many institutions reported extremely high rates of errors with the repayment rate metrics in aspects of the debt-to-earnings metric.

Compounding these concerns is the Department's acknowledgement last year that it had to recalculate all of the repayment rate data on the College Scorecard, due to a coding error. This coding error translates into incorrect data that confused both students and institutions. If the Department decides to proceed with the GE rule, we believe the rule must apply to all programs at all institutions equally. The problem of student loan debt is a serious one, and the nation's trillion-dollar student loan crisis affects all sectors of higher education.

For example, there is a well-respected, highly competitive fine arts college in New York City that happens to be a for-profit college. It has a high graduation rate of 66 percent, and a low student loan default rate of just 7 percent, which are undeniably exemplary outcomes. However, because its graduates pursue creative and fine arts careers that simply do not pay a lot in the first few years after they graduate, its programs won't pass the regulation.

The metrics don't consider student outcomes; they just focus solely on loan metrics. Therefore, although nearly every fine arts program in the country would fail the GE rule, only for-profit college programs will fail and be shut down because they are the only institutions subject to the GE rule. Finally, we would recommend the Department utilize the GE rule as a disclosure metric for all institutions, rather than a high-stakes loss of Title IV eligibility regulatory standard, singling out just one sector of higher education. Let's move on to the borrower defense to repayment. APC recommends that the Department first focus on the claims of individual students.

The association believes strongly that students who have been defrauded or misled should have just recourse. With regards to the claim, we believe that a student should file a claim first with the institution, prior to asserting any defense to repayment. This would be an efficient way to resolve meritorious claims without having to literally make a federal case out of a resolvable issue.

If the parties agree to pay all or part of the loan back, the institution would notify the Department and make the payment. If the student and institution cannot resolve the matter, then the borrower claim of defense should go to the Department. The Department can review each claim and, after some initial process of weeding out claims without merit, the Department should hold an administrative process to resolve the matter and make a determination. This process should involve the individual borrower that wants to assert the claim and the institution at all phases of the process. Lastly, given as these rules will need to be negotiated, we also suggest the Department add additional constituencies of interest to this session.

In addition to the typical required parties, we believe having a chief financial officer, chief business officer, or a legal chief officer from an institution of higher education on the panel would provide for a better informed committee. APC has participated in past negotiated rulemakings, and we welcome the opportunity to participate in the process as it moves forward for these two regulations.

In conclusion, New York State has a long-standing history of working together with institutions of higher ed in all four sectors, our state university system, city university system, independent non-profit and proprietary sector, to the benefit of all New Yorkers. This commitment to equality and parity across all sectors has created a robust and diverse education system that should be an example for the Department.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. STELLING-GURNETT: Finally, I thank you for your continued support of our students and for the opportunity to present this testimony today. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Adrienne Scott.

MS. SCOTT: Good morning, and thank you for the opportunity to share our thoughts on regulations affecting gainful employment and borrower defense to repayment. My name is Adrienne Scott, and I am the vice president of operations and education for a school located in Pennsylvania, called YTI Career Institute, which is owned by Porter and Chester Institute.

YTI has been educating and training students for 50 years, and Porter and Chester has been doing so for slightly over 70 years. I would first like to address the regulations surrounding gainful employment. The following items are not necessarily in order of importance, but all are important for consideration. Item 1, gainful employment is a lookback measure, which schools have no ability to influence. The students being evaluated graduated long ago, and there's no opportunity for schools to affect their debt loads or a program's historical cost.

At a minimum, the rates need to be considered informational, until we reach a time period where schools have had a chance to adjust to items such as a program's tuition, length, curriculum, and delivery model, in an attempt to improve effective programs.

Item 2, if debt load in comparison to typical wages is such an important metric, then it should be applied across all types of institutions, including traditional schools of higher education, and all across all degree programs and majors. Item 3, we have concerns regarding the GE methodology.

It only looks at Title IV students in a program and discounts the effect of students who are not accessing Title IV funds. Therefore, it skews the median loan debt, since these students typically do not have any debt. Additionally, it looks purely at income and wages, as opposed to income and wages earned from the field of study. Therefore, there is no true correlation between the education a student received and the job that they are currently holding. Item 4, GE addresses nothing in regards to the quality of the program. In effect, it is a tuition price control measure.

One suggestion on how to improve a failing program has been to tell schools to find a way to reduce students' debt.

However, the fault with this logic is that a school can only counsel students on debt borrowings. Schools have no ability or authority to limit the amount of money that a student chooses to borrow. Item 5, an identical program offered at two different schools could conceivably end up with different GE rates, simply because one program is eligible for state grant aid, and the other program is not.

In other words, the programs have the same tuition, the same graduation and employment rates, and the same median income levels, but because students attending the program at School A are able to access state grant aid, their median debt levels are lower. Therefore, the program at School A receives a passing GE score. Meanwhile, at School B, students in the exact same program do not have access to state grant funds and, therefore, they end up with a higher median loan debt, resulting in the program at School B receiving a failing GE score. With regard to borrower defense to repayment, we find this legislation to be overly burdensome, complicated and, in some areas, vague. Some pertinent points regarding this legislation.

Point 1, we strongly object to the fact that all provisions of Section 668.41, Reporting and Disclosure Information, regarding a loan repayment rate of less than or equal to zero, are applied only to proprietary institutions. If a low loan repayment rate is worthy of notification to enrolled and prospective students at proprietary schools, it is also worthy of notification to such students at all other schools.

As proposed, this regulation creates a very uneven playing field and denies information to enrolled and prospective students who could benefit from this warning. It also creates a situation of potential misrepresentation, as prospective students comparing a proprietary school with a warning and a public or not-for-profit school without a warning would conclude that a low loan repayment rate did not exist at the public or not-for-profit school when, in fact, the loan repayment rate for that school could be worse than the one at the proprietary school.

However, no one would know this unless the Department treats all schools equally and fairly and calculates this rate for all schools. Since the purported goal is helping students make informed decisions, we believe it is important to help students at public and not-for-profit institutions with this information.

We understand that the Department feels that a minority of public and not-for-profit schools would have low repayment rates, but that is no consolation to the students and prospective students at those schools who do have low loan repayment rates, who find themselves faced with the same challenges as students at proprietary schools with low repayment rates, but they will not have received any advance warning.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. SCOTT: This requirement does not cause any additional administrative burden to schools that have adequate loan repayment rates and, therefore, should not be a reason to systematically exclude all public and not-for-profit schools, and unfairly burdening one sector of schools is unnecessarily punitive. Thank you again for your time.

MS. WEISMAN: Bhavna Tailor.

MS. TAILOR: Good afternoon. My name is Bhavna Tailor. I represent -- my title is vice president of operations, and I represent Eastwick College, which is located in northern New Jersey. I'd like to begin by thanking the Department for reviewing both of these regulations, gainful employment and borrower debt to repayment.

We, in higher education, look forward to working with all of these rules that require more discussion to protect all students in the right way. All students who attend academic institutions should gain employment in their chosen fields of study, and it should not be limited to a small sector. Although the concept of gainful employment regulation sounds like a good idea, the actual regulation finalized in 2014 is arbitrary and counter-productive. It does not account for many real-life scenarios and has significant implementation and data problems that will have a negative impact on students and institutions.

The GE rule was originally intended to further define two words, gainful and employment, but turned into over an 800-page federal regulation, along with 100 additional electronic announcements and other documents schools have to comply with.

The significant time, staff, resources, and costs allowed to comply with these over-regulations would have been better spent on students, classrooms, and improving education offerings and helping tuition cost. GE assumes every student pursues full-time employment upon graduation.

If graduate choose to work part time, this will negatively impact the GE rate. The regulation does not account properly for tip-based professions, like cosmetology or beauty programs, where federal governments have acknowledged there under-reporting of income. Commission-based career fields and other passion-driven fields that are not always considered earnings, like arts, are not considered in the GE. It is not a one size fit all metric. There are no considerations for GE for benefits for a job that does not have direct earnings.

For example, hotel and hospitality management programs, graduates sometimes accept jobs and receive -- in exchange for housing or food assistance. GE only looks at the first three years of wages, and not the term earnings potentials in a career. In some cases, we consider education to be a lifetime investment; however, we're not looking at the metric as a lifetime investment.

The process to appeal the data in the current regulation is extremely burdensome and difficult to achieve. The student survey response thresholds are high, and they are complicated, biased metrics using the surveys that are skewed results and available in state-level data systems are scarce. There have been some significant data problems reported by many institutions on loan debt data, and also earning data used by the government in calculating the GE rates. Nothing in the regulation has anything to do with the quality of a program, graduate rates, placement rates, employers' needs for programs, or student satisfaction levels. These are the outcomes that matter, not complicated government-created metrics, calculated government data that does not account for real-life personal scenarios.

Schools educating a greater percentage of low-income or at-risk populations of students get punished more by the current GE rule because these populations often need to take out more loan assistance from the area that they live in and go to school in.

Our potential recommendation is to remove the arbitrary application of the regulation on the private sector, primarily, or to consider applying it to all Title IV institutions, to reduce the length of the 800-page regulation, the scope, and the burden of the regulation. Transition the regulation from being a punitive tool against programs in school and, instead, turn it into a transparency tool to help students make informed choices on their own.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. TAILOR: I also wanted to make a quick comment about borrower debt to repayment, the same comment as GE, that it should apply to all institutions equally. Thank you very much.

MS. WEISMAN: Gary Ratner.

MR. RATNER: Good morning. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to you in favor of the Department's efforts to establish negotiated rulemaking committees. My name is Gary Ratner. My company is Ratner Companies. Our firm was started by my grandfather in 1936.

Ratner Companies operates nearly 1,000 salons in 14 states in the District of Columbia, east of the Mississippi. We also have a partnership that owns three Paul Mitchell cosmetology schools in Florida and Virginia. The companies we currently run employ about 10,000 W2 licensed stylists.

Our employment packages include a full complement of benefits that include, but are not limited to, health and dental insurance, paid time off, and 401(k) programs. In short, we offer real jobs, with real benefits. We are always hiring, and when we hire, we're looking for the best salon professionals available. Most every stylist we hire, we employ, has been trained at one of the nation's cosmetology schools, including schools we own. They are accredited by a variety of accrediting agencies. Cosmetology schools are also governed by regulatory boards in each state and local and state health departments.

With these regulatory bodies in mind, I believe there are several questions the two committees to be established should review, including do we need more federal regulations around cosmetology? If the decision is made to retain gainful employment, should cosmetology schools be included or excluded, or should ways be found to address the realities of the cosmetology business?

On that latter point, if cosmetology schools are included, it is my belief that the Department should do a better job than it has in addressing the unique realities of the cosmetology business. You may know many cosmetologists in smaller chains or independent salons are sometimes paid in cash. Those who are paid in cash are known to under-report some of their incomes. That's a reality. It's not right, but it's also not fair to cosmetology schools to be held accountable for the under-reported income of their graduates, as is currently the case under the present gainful employment regulations. To hold schools accountable for the actions of its former students is akin to holding the Department of Education responsible for the actions of its former employees.

That would not be fair to the Department. However, if cosmetology schools are going to be responsible for the income reported by their graduates, the Department should work with the schools on making it easier to track and report graduates' income. Is the real issue not income, but rather default rates on loans?

A federal judge, Rudolph Contreras, recently noted, in his recent opinion in the case between the Department of Education and the AACS, that the Treasury Department has found that people receive -- that people that receive their income from tip-based or self-employment sources are estimated to report a lower amount of their income for tax purposes. As stated before, this is consistent with the findings of Paul Mitchell schools. After serving thousands of recent graduates from its schools, the surveyors following the Department of Education survey protocols also discovered that graduates under-reported their income. Once the income levels were adjusted, as allowed for by the Department, nearly all of its schools moved into the passing zone.

Assuming this is the case for nearly all cosmetology schools, I am left wondering if the present gainful employment rules are needed at all. Let me take one minute for borrower defense for repayment. The collapse of Corinthian colleges left the Department scrambling to develop an adequate system to protect students and taxpayers.

We fully understand the reasoning, but feel strongly the Department missed the mark on its solution. Under the present regulations, there is a laundry list of triggers that could require a school to get a letter of credit for 10 percent of the total income from federal student loans for the previous year. Those offenses are stackable. If a school hit four triggers, it could soon be faced with requirements that it be able to pay back 40 percent of student loans upon demand by the federal government. This will put many schools out of business, without having a chance to defend themselves. It will place a huge chill on any lenders considering whether or not to back the construction of a new school and put less stylists into the job market.

This is what we're here for, to create jobs, on my side. This is why I, again, reiterate my support for moving forward with the two committees. My recommendation request is that the representatives --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. RATNER: -- from the cosmetology school business and larger industry be appointed to the committee examining borrower defense repayment and other committee examining gainful employment. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Kevin Thompson.

MR. THOMPSON: Good morning. Thank you for listening to Brian's story because I'm one of the people that will be affected, along with my family. I'm AWO-1, retired, Kevin Thompson. I served in the Navy for 20 years. I have accomplished over 35,000 hours of flight time, and I've done multiple tours in support of Desert Storm, OEF and OIF. I have instructed, mentored, and trained over 200 individuals. Like many individuals like myself, who exit the military, our jobs do not relate to anything in the civilian world. Thus, I had to go to college to redo everything I learned.

At this point, I went to Illinois and attended community college, where I earned one B, and the rest As, and I earned two associate's degrees. My family and I moved to Phoenix, Arizona, where I attended ITT Tech, where I saw, in an advertisement, where you can complete your degree in 18 months.

As I only had 17 months and 23 days left on my GI Bill, I finally contacted ITT Tech, in Tempe, Arizona, and was told that I could not complete my degree that I had previously picked. They picked project management for me at this point, which allowed me to complete the degree in the amount of time that I had.

They also said that they would be able to provide jobs for me during the class and after the class, both were false. I gave them my resume and never was heard from again. ITT Tech also stated that the GI Bill would cover all the fees associated with attending the classes, and that nothing else would be needed. I had applied for the Pell grant before moving to Arizona and was approved. Neither I, nor any of my fellow classmates, have ever received funds from the Pell grant, as I had in every other school that I had attended.

ITT Tech did receive the grant money, but it's unclear where it went because me and my family were homeless twice during the period that I was attending ITT Tech. The instructors at ITT Tech were like most. Some were good; some were bad. It was all about reading a paragraph and writing a six-page paper on it. If this is what our education comes to, I would greatly worry.

They did this in order to meet the requirements by the accrediting association. The instructors did bring to class the actual experiences from what their job was associated with and the subject being taught, yet the school fell short of providing the resources they had promised, such as job placement and how the school would be paid. Of course, the ability to obtain the degree needed a lot of time, as they closed September 6, 2016. I heard this was closing while on a job, on the radio station. We were not even given the ability to plan ahead, which would have been nice. With the ITT Tech closing, the VA is now trying to collect on funds they had given ITT Tech prior to the class starting.

I was left without a degree, and now loans that I cannot repay, and I was left with 6 months and 13 days of the GI Bill. After contacting many colleges, I was unable to find one that would accept any of the credits and allow me to finish my degree in the allotted time.

Finally, I found a university that would accept some of the credits that was provided by ITT Tech, but could not say if I would be able to complete my degree on time. I am now two classes short of my BS in technical management and unable to complete the degree, due to the GI Bill not covering the classes or the living expenses that I've been living on. I request that you do anything that you can to stop schools like ITT Tech from taking individual's funds, lives, and dreams. Make schools more open about what types of jobs graduates are able to be employed in, be it an area of study or general, and lastly, hold schools accountable for the false promises and enable individuals like me, myself, and my wife, to recover the funds that we give these individuals.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. THOMPSON: Thank you for your attention.

MS. WEISMAN: Yael Shavit.

MS. SHAVIT: My name is Yael Shavit, and I'm an assistant attorney general in the consumer protection division of the Office of Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey. I am here today to convey Attorney General Healey's opposition to new rulemaking to replace the borrower defense rule and the gainful employment rule.

Nearly two years ago, our office participated in a public hearing at the exact same point in the process, at the initiation of the negotiated rulemaking that resulted in the borrower defense rule. That process was robust and thorough. Our office, numerous stakeholders, and dozens of Department staff participated in the extensive rulemaking process. We are dismayed by the Department's decision to cast aside all the hard work and progress achieved during its previous rulemakings and disheartened that the Department has decided to turn its back on the critical protections that it promised to borrowers.

Our office believes that this is both a waste of resources and a betrayal of students who count on the Department to protect them from abuse at the hands of predatory schools. Both the borrower defense rule and the gainful employment rule were promulgated after comprehensive negotiated rulemaking processes and established protections for students and taxpayers from predatory schools, including those in the for-profit education sector.

The Department is well aware of the abuses that students are subjected to by predatory for-profit schools and the need for these rules. Just last year, then Secretary of Education John King joined Attorney General Healey in Boston and promised that the Department would, quote, take action to protect students and taxpayers from unscrupulous companies trying to profit off of students who simply want to better their lives. Unfortunately, rather than fulfilling this promise, the Department's decision to revoke and replace the protections that so many of us worked for imperils students and emboldens for-profit schools.

Over the past several years, our office and attorneys general across the country have made addressing the abuse of student borrowers by for-profit schools a priority. Through our investigations, we have documented outrageous misconduct on the part of such schools.

We regularly speak with students who were lured into programs with the promise of employment opportunities and higher earnings, only to be left with little to show for their efforts beyond unaffordable debt. Our offices have undertaken numerous enforcement actions against schools to combat these types of practices.

The Department, likewise, has a crucial and indispensable role to play in preventing misconduct by predatory schools, protecting students from abuse, and protecting taxpayers from bearing the costs of schools' misconduct. The borrower defense rule and the gainful employment rule were designed to make progress towards these very goals. The borrower defense rule was established to ensure that students have a fair and transparent process to effectuate a defense to loan repayment when their schools commit misconduct.

This rule also protects taxpayers by ensuring that schools engaging in misconduct take financial responsibility when their unlawful actions result in discharges of borrowers' loans, and by prohibiting schools from using arbitration agreements and class action waivers to stop students from bringing claims directly against schools in court.

Similarly, the gainful employment rule was designed to ensure that students attending vocational programs receive education that will allow them, at a minimum, to repay their federal student loans. The rule enables prospective students to receive important information about student outcomes of the programs they're considering. This empowers students to make informed decisions and protects students from programs that will leave them with burdensome debt and poor job prospects. The gainful employment rule also protects taxpayers by ensuring that federal student loan dollars are not spent to fund career training programs that consistently fail to prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation.

Students count on the Department and offices like ours to protect their interests. The gainful employment rule and the borrower defense rule are steps in the right direction. These rules are the products of a significant amount of time and effort on the part of numerous stakeholders and the Department.

Simply abandoning them is both a waste of Departmental resources and an injustice for the students that these rules were designed to protect. For this reason, we call on the Department to fulfill its responsibilities to students and reconsider its decision to revoke and replace these critical protections. Thank you for the time to speak today.

MS. WEISMAN: Anne Gross.

MS. GROSS: Hello. My name is Anne Gross. I'm vice president of regulatory affairs at the National Association of College and University Business Officers. I appreciate the opportunity to share our concerns with you. NACUBO supported Ed's efforts to update its regulations on borrower defense to repayment.

It's important to protect students from misleading, deceitful and predatory practices and ensure that student borrowers are not left in the lurch by the sudden closure of their institution. We're primarily concerned about the changes last year's rulemaking made to the financial responsibility standards.

Ed's intention to include this subpart in the negotiations was not disclosed in a transparent manner, in the appropriate notices, and Ed did not invite anyone with expertise in higher education finance to participate in the rulemaking. Consequently, the borrower defense rulemaking made significant changes, without having the right people at the table.

We urge you to appoint a separate negotiating committee to address financial responsibility standards for non-profit institutions. This smaller group could work concurrently with the Borrower Defense Committee and coordinate, as appropriate. I have participated in and observed many negotiated rulemaking efforts over the years and truly believe that a more targeted approach has a much better chance of success. Frankly, the right stakeholders for borrower defense to repayment don't have the necessary knowledge or interest in the financial responsibility standards, and vice versa.

This is the right time to take up the financial responsibility standards for non-profit institution for three main reasons. One, first of all, we have the changes that the borrower defense rules made to the financial responsibility standards, based largely on anecdotal information and conjecture, rather than data, and without the involvement of any experts in the field.

They added multiple triggers, without evidence of their likely importance or impact. There is no materiality threshold. For most schools, it simply added new hoops to jump through and jeopardy based on their ability to put systems in place to report things in a timely manner. No. 2, last summer, the Financial Accounting Standards Board issued new rules for non-profit institutions that will alter the way non-profit institutions present their financial statements and render the current definitions and ratio calculations obsolete.

Institutions will be required to comply with the FASB rules for their financial statements for FY 2018 and '19, but are encouraged to implement sooner. Many may do so for the FY 2017-18 financial statements; some are already doing it this year for their financial statements this year.

That is going to cause a problem in calculating the composite scores for these institutions. A number of the changes include a change to the temporarily restricted category of net assets, which will not exist anymore and is used in some of those calculations.

There's also changes in how endowment losses will flow through the statements. Liquidity and availability disclosures won't work quite the way they do, so there's a number of reasons there really calling for the Department to deal with this, and to deal with it in a timely manner. Our third reason is long-standing concerns that NACUBO and others have had about Ed's interpretation of the current rules and how they calculate institutions' composite scores. NACUBO has been trying for more than eight years to resolve these issues, without success.

Most of them relate to differences between non-profit and for-profit financial statements in areas of endowments, pension plans, investment, and physical plan, pledges, and the like, where there are significant differences between for-profit and non-profit institutions.

The federal government should not be building additional layers of complexity on top of a faulty foundation, as they have with the changes made to the financial responsibility rules in the borrower defense. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: That concludes our speakers for the morning part of our session today. We do have a few time slots remaining in the latter part of the afternoon. If you have not yet signed up and do wish to speak, please see someone at the front desk to schedule a time. We will take an hour for lunch. We will resume at approximately 1:10, so please be back by 1:10.

(Whereupon, the above-entitled matter went off the record at 12:07 p.m. and resumed at 1:10 p.m.)

MS. WEISMAN: Good afternoon. We're going to resume with our testimony in just a minute. As we get started, as some of you may have joined us later in the day, we'd like to remind you to please silence your cell phones. We will do five minutes per speaker.

If you get to the five-minute mark and have not stopped speaking yet, I will let you know that time is up. At that point, you can wrap up your testimony. You'd have another 15 to 20 seconds to do so. We will take a break at approximately 2:30. We do still have some slots available in the afternoon session, from 2:40, until we finish at the end of the day, at 4:00.

Because this is a public hearing and we've publicized that we will be here until 4:00, we will stay until that time, whether or not speakers are here. We do want to let you know, though, if you have not signed up yet to speak, please do so at the desk. At the time of the break, we'll look at the schedule and see if we can consolidate. We'll call people; if they're early, that's fine; if not, we will call them up again at their assigned time, but we may have extra breaks this afternoon. To get started again, we look to call Walter Ochinko.

MR. OCHINKO: Hi, my name is Walter Ochinko. I'm the research and policy director for Veterans Education Success. We're a small non-profit dedicated to the promise and integrity of the GI Bill. I'd like to use my five minutes to explain why the 2014 gainful employment regulations and the 2016 borrower defense regulations matter to veterans.

First, let's be clear that these regulations are necessary because of predatory schools like Corinthian and ITT Tech. The hallmark of predatory schools is the use of misleading advertising to recruit students. The 90/10 loophole incentivizes such bad actors to prey on veterans and service members.

Their hard-earned educational benefits allow predatory schools to enroll nine individuals who depend on federal student aid for every veteran or service member. As Holly Petraeus said, the 90/10 loophole puts a target on the back of veterans. The 2012 senate health investigations of for-profit schools documented the use of Title IV revenue for aggressive recruiting, use of psychological manipulation to enroll students, pain points, reliance on lead generators to identify potential recruits, which results in incessant phone calls and emails, excessive expenditures on recruiting while short-shrifting instruction.

Veterans are particularly vulnerable to high-pressure recruiting. They are frequently encouraged to enroll on the spot. Over 60 percent are the first in their family to attend college. Many are married, have children, and work. The promise of immediate enrollment and quick degrees are compelling, as are the false promises about cost, accreditation, job placement, and post-graduation earnings.

Since 2012, the FTC, CFPB, Justice, and numerous state attorneys general have concluded 17 settlements with for-profit schools. The basis for these settlements were findings of misleading and deceptive advertising and recruiting, including misrepresenting costs, quality, accreditation, transferability of credits, job placement rates, and post-graduation salaries. Ed documented widespread misrepresentation at job placement rates by Corinthian. GE will help protect veterans by shutting down and requiring warnings for career education programs that leave students with too much debt relative to income. In fact, many such programs have already been eliminated because of gainful employment. VES helps veterans who are deceived by for-profit schools.

Their stories mirror the findings of federal and state settlements. The ban on mandatory arbitration in the BD regulation will allow the voices of these veterans to be heard and serve as a deterrent to predatory behavior. One frequently voiced complaint is that schools originate federal student loans that veterans don't need, want, or authorize because they have the GI Bill.

For-profit schools are incentivized to originate federal loans because GI Bill dollars are much slower to arrive, particularly when the veteran enrolls on the spot and hasn't applied for the paperwork to start using his GI Bill benefits. As you know, many for-profit schools are in precarious financial condition, due to declining enrollment and the negative publicity generated by federal and state investigations and settlements. In June 2014, Corinthian notified Ed that it would have to declare bankruptcy if Ed delayed aid disbursement by just 21 days. In September 2016, ITT Tech abruptly shut its doors after Ed cut off financial aid to new students.

Corinthian had no letter of credit, and Ed was in the process of substantially increasing ITT's when it closed. As a result, taxpayers will bear all or most of the cost of these closed school discharges. The financial responsibility requirements of borrower defense will give schools skin in the game, act as a deterrent to predatory behavior, and help protect taxpayers from the cost of forgiving federal student loans when a school closes.

While strong Ed regulations make it easier for borrowers to obtain the relief that they are entitled to under existing federal law, loan forgiveness will not make veterans whole again. If they use some or all of their 36 months of entitlement at a predatory school that encouraged them to enroll with false promises, those GI Bill benefits are gone forever. I'd like to conclude by asking you not to delay the implementation of current regulations, as written. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Chelsea Coatney.

MS. COATNEY: Hi, everyone. My name is Chelsea Coatney, and I work with Higher Ed, Not Debt, a multi-year campaign project dedicated to solving the problem of student debt by addressing the root causes of college unaffordability and tackling problems of accountability and transparency within the student loan system.

Thank you for this opportunity to share some of the personal stories I've come across in my work engaging with student loan borrowers and for-profit college students. I'm here to ask the Department to implement the borrower defense rule now. The first story I'll share is from Destiny, a student loan borrower from North Carolina.

I attended the Art Institute of Pittsburgh from 2009 to 2012, with hopes of getting my Bachelors of the Arts degree, with help from financial aid. When I started classes, I found that most of the instructors had little to no experience in the fields they were teaching, and often couldn't provide technical assistance on how to achieve something in the programs we were using. I realized my own self-taught skills with the programs was at least on par with what they knew, and often, I was offering alternative ways of doing things to other students and the moderators, themselves.

After paying massive tuition costs, lab fees, class fees, and application fees, and stretching my finances to the max, I started having trouble paying my bills, even while I was working full time. After a few years in, I found out that all of these unforeseen and totally unknown to me costs were piling up to double the cost of tuition I had seen on the website when I had applied.

I applied for and received a few grants to aid me in pursuing an education full time, while I continued to work full time. The grants were awarded, sent to the school, but never applied to me. The financial aid office later told me that online students are not eligible to apply grant aid to attendance costs, despite the online school being clearly stated in the application before approval. After three years of working to excel in and complete the program, the school claimed I had used up all of my financial aid and was no longer eligible to attend and finish my BA. I was forced to settle for an associate's degree. I'm nearly $75,000 in student debt, and after years of stress and financial instability, I have a useless associate's degree and don't even get interviews for the job I trained for.

The career center, whom I worked with continuously and extensively during my time there and following graduation, made me one offer, to place me in a minimum wage retail job. I, like many who attended the Art Institute of Pittsburgh, are struggling to find a way to use their degree effectively and to make ends meet.

Although the federal government sued the school in 2011 for $11 billion, none of us saw a penny to help us in our struggle, all the while interest piles up on our unpayable student loans. Next, I will share a story from Bianca, a graduate of ITT Tech, who sent us her story just a few weeks ago because despite being one of the thousands of borrowers that the Department had approved for loan forgiveness, due to the closure of ITT Tech, the security of Bianca's financial future still remains in limbo, as she waits for the loan forgiveness that was promised her. I emigrated with my family from Mexico when I was 3 years old. I learned to speak English by the time I reached first grade. I had high hopes and dreams of working in the criminal justice system.

I was passionate about justice, helping and serving my country and fellow citizens. When I started in high school, I enrolled in ROTC for four years and dreamed of serving in the armed forces and serving our great country. When I was 18 and a high school graduate, I was speaking with an Army recruiter, ready to go into the armed forces. My parents were proud, and so was I.

One afternoon, I received a call from an ITT Technical Institute recruiter. I remember his words. He actually discouraged me from serving in the military. He said, and I quote, I served in the Marines, and it didn't help me. I'm telling you, coming to ITT Tech will help you more than the Army. I was completely ignorant to the higher education system, being the first one to attend college in the family. My parents were also misled. My mother attended the admissions appointment with me and was misled into co-signing for my outrageous tuition of $66,000 for a non-legitimate criminal justice degree. While in school, three of our criminal justice instructors warned us about our degree, stating that once we graduated, our degree would not be of any use, since it wasn't accredited.

I didn't understand what they meant by that until I graduated and was unable to find a job in the criminal justice system. When I graduated from ITT Tech, the employment department sent me a few job openings for security officers, a position that does not require a four-year degree and pays the minimum wage.

I could have found that job on my own, without a degree. I'm currently working for a security company that pays me only $11.50 an hour, and this doesn't come close to helping me pay down an $800 a month student loan. I finally gave up. I was on the verge of serious depression and emotional distress. I am desperate for help. Everywhere I applied, I was turned down. I can't understand why I have to pay back loans for this disservice this institution did to me and my future. I'm looking for justice, and I'm looking for someone to help me get the loan forgiveness I deserve. On behalf of these borrowers, I'd like to ask the Department, in the words of a story recently submitted to us by the student loan borrower, Deborah, to erase these debts like you did for-profit's crimes. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Christian L. Smith.

MR. SMITH: Good afternoon, everyone. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on the borrower defense to repayment rule currently under regulatory negotiation by the Department. I'm an organizer with Generation Progress and its Higher Ed, Not Debt campaign.

I work in youth advocacy and on the policies that affect the affordability of post-secondary education, student loan borrowers, consumer rights, and the $1.4 trillion student debt burden being borne by students of all ages and types. Amongst the students I regularly work with, there is a broad opposition to beginning a new rulemaking process and to delaying the borrower defense rule that should have been implemented July 1st. The Higher Ed, Not Debt campaign has heard from thousands of students who attended for-profit colleges over the years. To this day, many are either waiting on loan discharges after their schools were shut down for committing fraud, or they are currently dealing with present day bad actors whom the Department needs the borrower defense rule to keep accountable.

I'm here to put a face to these borrowers and to the defense rule, as well, and the pain that is being caused every single day that its implementation is delayed. For example, Koty, from Martinsburg, West Virginia, should be eligible for loan forgiveness, but instead, he is watching the high interest on his loan tick up daily. Here's his story.

Quote, I went to WyoTech to get a head start on getting some experience, so I could get a better job than $10 an hour. They came to my home and promised me all these great things about the school and how they would even help me get a job with their career service department. They never helped with finding me a job and three months later, after finishing WyoTech, I was making $9 an hour. Since then, I have bounced around from job to job, trying to make more money to pay different loans I paid for the school with. So here I am, forced into higher interest federal and private loans. I had to pay $600 to get the federal loan into a program that they halfway lied about, and I'm still stuck with the ridiculously high interest private loan.

I'm not asking for $1 million, but just for things to be made right. The school was able to get away from paying out what they were supposed to, so what about us? Both my diplomas are useless to me, so why should I have to pay more for what I was supposed to get from them?

Another student, Kai Naihe, from Otto, North Caroline, said that she was defrauded and harassed by her for-profit, Florida Metropolitan University, a subsidiary of Corinthian Colleges, Incorporated, saying, quote, I was intentionally misled by Florida Metropolitan University in the way of career placement, grants I didn't have to repay, and refunds due me from 2001 to 2005. Florida Metropolitan University is predatory and would not stop calling me until I enrolled and was told I would go nowhere in life without their help. Former students like Julie, in Irvine, California, had this message for the Department of Education, upon hearing about the rule delay, quote, I'm not only a 17-year breast cancer survivor, but I'm also an Everest College Medical Assistant graduate, with honors, from April 2015, with no diploma to show for it, as well.

I was used by Corinthian Colleges to inflate their graduation numbers, with them signing me up for school loans without my permission. I was super excited to get my degree, in order to make a difference in other cancer patients' lives, after my mom had just passed before I began Everest College, in Anaheim. Please don't take away or delay my right for loan forgiveness.

It wasn't our fault for the CCI's bankruptcy and the flat-out blatant lies which they kept telling us. Risha Bowman, of Alabama, had this to say about the Department's delay of the rule. I am shocked to hear that you are blocking this rule on loan forgiveness. I attended Everest University and did receive my paralegal degree. However, $35,000 later, I am no better off than I was before. I tried, on many occasions, to leave the college, but the recruiters/advisors kept me on the phone for hours, until I changed my mind. The last semester I also was told the college did not update my federal database, so I had to borrow money from their private lenders in order to graduate. I was happy with the Trump administration until today, when I heard this.

I am from a middle-class family and struggling to pay the bills. I don't mind paying for an education, but believe I was defrauded. The strength of the institutional accountability and financial responsibility requirements of this rule allow the Department to catch problems like these earlier, and to ensure that if a school is engaging in unscrupulous practices, it will be the school, not the students, that must pay for these actions.

The rule has a very real consequence for students' financial health and consumer rights, and this delay is harmful to borrowers already struggling -- my colleagues will be speaking later on the specific items within these particular requirements of financial responsibility -- and directly act as preventative measures to the problems faced by the victims of deceptive practices. Namely, the director of Generation Progress, Maggie Thompson, will speak to these institutional accountability and financial responsibility requirements within borrower defense. I hope that these stories serve to contextualize the impact this rule will have on real people who desperately need the Department to seek their best interests and protection. Thank you for your time.

MS. WEISMAN: Lisa Sodeika.

MS. SODEIKA: Good afternoon. My name is Lisa Sodeika. I am the senior vice president of external relations and regulatory affairs at ADTLEM Global Education. I'm here today on behalf of the Title IV participating institutions at ADTLEM, AUC School of Medicine, Carrington College, Chamberlain University, DeVry University, Ross University School of Medicine, Ross University School of Veterinary Medicine, and the nearly 73,000 students that we serve.

At ADTLEM, our mission is to empower students to achieve their goals, find success, and make inspiring contributions to our global community. We recognize we cannot empower students for success without first providing quality faculty, academic programs, and student services. Doing those things well should translate to positive student outcomes. That is why ADTLEM has, and continues to, support efforts to heighten institutional accountability across higher education.

We support the underlying premise of GE and agree that aspects of the current GE rules have been beneficial. Yes, perhaps surprisingly, you have a for-profit higher education organization standing before you today confirming that aspects of the GE rules have proven beneficial. In our case, ADTLEM institutions reviewed their programs and found that 5 out of approximately 89 of our programs failed.

The debt to earnings measures provided us with insights and led us to alter program curriculum and credential levels to better align the costs of these five programs with the earnings of our graduates. However, as with most public policy, there is the possibility of unintended consequences. Within the ADTLEM family of institutions, we have a clear example of an exceptional program that, nevertheless, is a casualty of the GE rules, as they are currently written. That program is our Ross University School of Veterinary Medicine. Ross Vet provides a very high-quality Doctor of Veterinary Medicine program and contributes significantly to the U.S. workforce. Approximately 300 graduates per year, and our alumni population, account for nearly 4 percent of the current U.S. veterinary workforce.

Ross Vet is accredited by the American Veterinary Medical Association, AVMA, which is the sole accreditor for all U.S. and Canadian veterinary programs. Let me tell you about the quality of our graduates, of our students. At 83 percent, our students score above the 80 percent North American veterinary licensing examination score threshold for AVMA accreditation.

Additionally, Ross Vet's tuition rate is mid-range among U.S. private and out-of-state public tuition rates. In at least one survey by the AVMA, Ross Vet graduate earnings are above the median for all veterinary school graduates. Importantly, as income and ability to repay student debt is a key premise behind the need for the GE regulation, our Ross Veterinary students repay their student loans. The three-year cohort default rate for this program consistently runs less than 1 percent for fiscal year 2013, for instance, our cohort default rate, .7 percent.

Ross Vet's outcomes provide clear, quantified evidence of a professional education program that graduates students who are contributing significantly to the U.S. veterinary workforce, passing their licensing examinations, and repaying their Title IV loans at a very high rate, 93 plus percent, yet it is falling into the zone, according to current GE rules.

We believe the elimination of a high-quality program such as this was not the intention of GE. Ross's veterinary program is, instead, an unintended casualty brought about from having a single, standalone measure applied broadly across all levels of education.

Therefore, we'd like to provide a few potential solutions that apply not only to our graduate veterinary program, but also to other high-quality graduate programs. We believe the rulemaking committee could consider the following ideas. Consider other performance measures that give the rule flexibility to not harm quality programs that show their value through other outcomes, such as licensure pass rates and low-cohort default rates. Consider the value of the disclosure required under GE. We find these disclosures useful and believe they are informative to all students, regardless of program type or institution. For instance, considering eliminating the zone as a pathway to ineligibility, but rather use it as a high debt warning disclosure.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. SODEIKA: Given that GE's intent was to lower debt on credential programs, consider exempting graduate professional degrees. In any rulemaking scenario, ADTLEM does believe that we should continue to be very transparent on outcomes, and we thank you for allowing us to participate today.

MS. WEISMAN: Charlotte Hancock.

MS. HANCOCK: Hello, my name is Charlotte Hancock, and I am the program director for Higher Ed, Not Debt, a multi-organization campaign dedicated to the premise that a high-quality higher education should be affordable and accessible to all, without the burden of financial hardship. Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments today. At Higher Ed, Not Debt, we have heard from more than 9,000 students who attended for-profit colleges. The majority of these students shared their stories with us and all have demanded a refund from their school. These stories run anywhere from five sentences to 4,000 words.

They take place at schools from the 1980s through present day, and they're nothing less than heartbreaking. Higher Ed, Not Debt, and the thousands of borrowers we work with and come here on behalf of strongly oppose the delay, dismantling, or weakening of the gainful employment regulations finalized in October 2014 and the borrower defense to repayment and college accountability regulations finalized in November 2016.

Every day of delay allows more students to fall prey to unscrupulous colleges that have profits, not students, in mind in their operations. Students, veterans, and taxpayers have waited far too long already for these critical protections from unmanageable student debt, sudden school closures, and waste, fraud, and abuse in higher education. Students and taxpayers cannot afford a pause. Their interest continues to accrue, and their credit scores continue to suffer. The students we hear from are not looking for a free ride. They're looking for a fair shot. Any school or program properly doing its job for students will not find it hard to comply with the rules as they should have gone into effect.

I hope to keep this brief, as our stance is much the same it was during the last year plus the Department has dedicated time to this. These rules are important and must be implemented now. The rules should include the following, as Higher Ed, Not Debt has previously asked for. Students who were deceived by their schools should be made as whole as possible through the processes laid out in the rule.

Students that attend a college that breaks its promises will never recover the time, transportation costs, and other out-of-pocket costs they may have wasted pursuing an education that did not live up to its promise. Additionally, the rule should eliminate arbitrary limitation periods on a borrower's ability to assert a borrower defense claim. Common law generally allows a debtor to assert a claim at any time, as long as repayment is ongoing. Additionally, the process by which a student's eligibility for borrower defense is determined must be transparent and independent, and not a function of the Department's ability to recoup damages from a school.

Next, the process for individual claims must be simple, accessible, and transparent for borrowers. It is important that this process is not overly burdensome for an individual borrower who will not have access to the same resources and evidence that an institution may have. The regulation must protect students from large-scale misrepresentation by educational institutions.

In cases where common facts and claims demonstrate that there is a basis for borrower defense, this regulation must require that the secretary grant relief for borrowers in that established group. We also ask that the rule maintain sections that ensure borrowers are not financially penalized for making a borrower defense claim through the use of tools like forbearance. Finally, we ask that the Department is able to recover costs from unscrupulous institutions. We support the Department's ability to recover costs from an institution associated with their financial liability for failing to perform their function as Title IV recipients. Thank you again for your time. We just ask that you keep students' lives and their financial responsibilities in mind in this.

MS. WEISMAN: Maggie Thompson.

MS. THOMPSON: Good afternoon. My name is Maggie Thompson. I'm the executive director of Generation Progress. We're the youth engagement arm of the Center for American Progress. At Generation Progress, we work with and for young people to promote progressive policy solutions to political and social challenges faced by our generation, the largest and most diverse in American history.

I also served as a non-federal negotiator representing the interests of consumers during the original negotiated rulemaking for the borrower defense rule, where representatives from multiple sectors, with diverse perspectives, openly and publicly negotiated the current borrower defense rule. As my colleague, Charlotte, noted, Generation Progress's Higher Ed, Not Debt campaign has heard from over 9,000 students who have demanded a refund from their for-profit college. We strongly oppose the delay of both the gainful employment and borrower defense rules, or the dismantling of either. Students have waited far too long already to be made whole.

These are critical protections that they need now. I want to focus my remarks on the aspects of the borrower defense rule, though, that don't just protect students, but really protect taxpayers and ensure that public dollars flowing to schools through the Title IV program are not misused by institutions to amp profit margins or drive students into debt with degrees that are next to worthless.

Financial responsibility requirements for schools are vitally important to protect taxpayers and ensure the health and long-term integrity of Title IV programs into the future. The collapse of Corinthian Colleges, more recently ITT Tech and other institutions, underscores the importance of these preventative measures enshrined in the financial responsibility sections of the current rule. The strength of the financial responsibility requirements of the rule will allow the Department to catch problems with institutions earlier and ensure that if a school is engaged in unscrupulous practices, it will be the school, and not taxpayers or students, that must pay for those actions.

Clearly defined triggers for institutions to obtain letters of credit, for example, are crucial. Without these clearly defined financial penalties, it is far too easy for institutions to engage in behavior that is not in the best interests of students, and then close down without warning. Currently, when this happens, taxpayers or students are stuck paying the bill for any student loan discharges or forgiveness, when it's possible.

This is not a burdensome regulation. This rule simply defines clear guardrails for schools to earn the right to receive our public dollars. Finally, students should never be compelled to sign away their legal rights in order to enter a classroom. The borrower defense rules prohibition of pre-dispute mandatory arbitration clauses and class action bans in student enrollment agreements is crucial. As the Department has recognized, arbitration clauses that limit students' ability to sue make it more difficult to hold the institutions of higher education accountable. Yet, such clauses have been ubiquitous among for-profit colleges.

Billions of dollars in federal financial aid have flowed to institutions with these types of provisions in their enrollment agreements, effectively giving education programs a free pass for low quality. Limiting the use of litigation also hampers regulatory effectiveness. Legal developments can indicate to regulators and policy makers pressing issues towards which they should direct their resources and enforcement actions.

When arbitration has been used as a dispute resolution mechanism, the processes and outcomes have often been opaque, due to confidentiality agreements. But empirical evidence to date generally suggests both a lower likelihood of success in arbitration, relative to the courts, as well as lower financial amounts returned to wronged individuals. We applaud the Department's inclusion of this provision in the rule. For those three reasons, those three sections of the rule, this is vitally important, again, not just to protect students, but taxpayers. The borrower defense rule is simple and important.

If an institution commits fraud, its students deserve a discharge of their federal loans.

Fraudulent schools, not taxpayers, should be on the hook to pay those debts, and no student should ever have to sign away their legal rights just to get into a classroom. Thank you for your time.

MS. WEISMAN: Timothy Powers.

MR. POWERS: Good afternoon, and thank you for the opportunity to offer these public comments on behalf of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

NAICU serves as the unified national voice of independent higher education and reflects the diversity of private, non-profit, higher education in the United States. Our member institutions include major research universities, church-related colleges, historically Black colleges, art and design colleges, traditional liberal arts and sciences institutions, women's colleges, two-year colleges, and schools of law, medicine, engineering, business, and other professions. With over 3 million students attending independent colleges, the private, non-profit sector of American higher ed has a dramatic impact on our nation's larger public interests.

NAICU supports the need for regulations which consistently and fairly implement the borrower defense to repayment statutory directive, as instructed by Congress in Section 455(h) of the Higher Education Act.

Further, NAICU supports both the statutory language that allows students to receive student loan forgiveness when defrauded by an institution and the regulatory concept that allows the federal government to be reimbursed by the offending institution when such relief is granted.

That does not mean that the current regulatory construct is perfect, but any changes should provide protections for defrauded students and taxpayers, while also protecting against frivolous lawsuits. While the Department's final rule did take several appropriate steps to address some of the major problems identified by NAICU in its notice of proposed rulemaking, one aspect which remains particularly troubling to independent colleges is the reliance on the flawed system of financial responsibility standards as an indicator of institutional financial health.

There are several specific concerns with this aspect of the current borrower defense to repayment regulations. First, the financial responsibility process was included in the 1992 reauthorization of the Higher Ed Act as an indicator of whether an institution was at risk of precipitous closure. Notably, we know of no non-profit college or university which has closed precipitously since the provision has been enacted.

Second, in promulgating borrower defense regulations in 2016, the Department of Education did not disclose before the negotiated rulemaking sessions that it intended to modify the existing financial responsibility standards, nor did it include on the negotiated rulemaking panel experts with non-profit accounting experience to lend in the development of these new policies. This, despite the fact that NAICU and other associations, some of whom you've heard from today, have raised the concerns about the validity of the measure, as indicated in the 2012 task force report. The 2016 regulations added more consequences to the financial responsibility system, without correcting its inherent problems.

The financial responsibility standards have not been updated by the Department since 1997 and have unfairly and inappropriately affected non-profit institutions, often due to misclassified and miscalculated composite ratios. There are numerous examples of the Department of Ed mistreating assets unique to the non-profit sector, such as endowments and pension liabilities, often requiring institutions to post expensive and unnecessary letters of credit.

The need to revisit the current financial responsibility standard is no longer an option. For the first time since the 1990s, the professional standards used in the calculation of the financial responsibility composite scores, as required by the Higher Education Act, have been revised. These forthcoming changes to non-profit accounting standards issued by the Financial Accounting Standards Board, or FASB, will make significant changes to existing reporting methodologies, only intensifying the need to re-evaluate the Department's administration of the financial responsibility standards.

Private, non-profit colleges and universities must be in compliance with these updated standards by FY 2018-19, though many colleges are expected to adopt early. The financial responsibility standards must be updated to reflect these changing accounting principles.

Therefore, in addition to the negotiated rulemaking panels to address the gainful employment and borrower defense to repayment regulations, NAICU requests that a separate negotiated rulemaking panel be convened to focus on the financial responsibility standards, as applied to private, non-profit college and universities.

The focus of this panel is to improve upon current practices and to bring the financial responsibility standards in line with evolving Financial Accounting Standards Board's practices. The panel should run concurrent to the borrower defense panel, if the financial responsibility standards remained intertwined with the borrower defense regulations. NAICU has worked to identify many of the current problems with the financial responsibility scores, including the formation of the aforementioned task force dedicated to searching for solutions to fix these problems.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MR. POWERS: The NAICU 2012 report on financial responsibility provides detailed background on the issues, and some of these recommendations could be implemented immediately. Thank you for your time, and we look forward to working with you.

MS. WEISMAN: Karla Gilbride.

MS. GILBRIDE: Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to you today. My name is Karla Gilbride, and I am a staff attorney at Public Justice. Public Justice brings high impact litigation and advocates on behalf of low-income consumers and others who are harmed by predatory corporate conduct. I can think of no better example of predatory corporate conduct than the high-pressure sales tactics engaged in by some representatives of for-profit universities that have been well-documented in media accounts and in the well-researched report of the negotiated rulemaking committee, documenting how for-profit schools often target their outreach to veterans, to low-income students and students of color, and to students who are the first in their families to attend an institution of higher education and are trying to better their job prospects by getting a degree which, all too often, turns out to be worthless, not to provide gainful employment, and to leave the students saddled with thousands, sometimes hundreds of thousands of debt that they are unable to repay.

We have had tens, dozens, maybe hundreds of people contact us, through our members and directly, with horror stories of how they have been victimized by for-profit schools.

That's why I'm particularly disappointed and frustrated by the need to come here today. Because the Department has looked into these issues and has engaged in a thoughtful and well-considered negotiated rulemaking process over years, with all of the affected stakeholders having a seat at the table. That long-term negotiated rulemaking process has resulted in two excellent rules. Perhaps they're not perfect.

Nothing that's the result of compromise is and doesn't give everyone everything they would have hoped, but those rules represent a huge step forward for holding recipients of federal financial aid accountable, for protecting students when they're defrauded, and as others have mentioned, for protecting the taxpayers, who are often left paying the bill and holding the bag when these fly-by-night institutions go out of business, close their doors, and stop serving students.

The gainful employment rule provides an important spotlight and disclosure on the results of schools, so that students, before they commit to taking on debt, before they commit to spending a bunch of money on a degree, have reliable information about the employment rates in their chosen fields and other reliable indicators that are not marketing from the schools, themselves, but that they can compare apples to apples across particular programs that they're investigating. The borrower defense rule ensures that when schools do defraud students, the schools, and not the students, themselves, or the taxpayers, are held financially responsible in a uniform manner.

One of the most important things that the borrower defense rule does -- because many of the documented cases of fraud that we've seen over the last few years with Corinthian Colleges and with ITT Tech are practices that were the same across the board, that affected many students in similar ways, things like inflating job placement rates and misleading people about the types of jobs that graduates were getting.

In the case of ITT Tech, misleading students about whether credits would be transferrable. These were uniform practices that affected people across the country and in particular states similarly and would have been ideal candidates for class actions that would have changed the practices of these schools, created a significant deterrent to their actions and, ideally, caused them to change their practices. But because of the proliferation of class action bans and pre-dispute arbitration provisions, students were not able to join together and file these actions and privately enforce their rights in an effective way. Without that ability to band together and bring what might, individually, be small-value claims on a joint basis, schools could act with impunity, continue to defraud students, and not be held accountable in any systematic way.

If the Department does go back to the drawing board and begin again with a new rulemaking process, we would strongly encourage that any new borrower defense rule include the same limitation on the use of mandatory, pre-dispute arbitration and class action bans that is contained in the current rule.

However, our primary request is that there be no further delay, that the Department, instead of going back to the drawing board and engaging in a regulatory reset, simply enforce the existing borrower defense and gainful employment rules that it has promulgated. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Representative Mark Takano.

MR. TAKANO: Good afternoon. I'm here to express my profound concern with the Department of Education's effort to delay and undermine the rules protecting students and taxpayers from unethical practices in the for-profit college industry. As a public school teacher for 24 years, and as a community college trustee for two decades, I had the privilege of seeing our education system open up opportunities to thousands of students.

But I also saw for-profit colleges exploit my students' hunger for opportunity by recruiting them with dubious promises of a brighter future and sending them, instead, to financial ruin. The Department of Education has a responsibility to protect students, not the earnings of for-profit colleges.

Delaying, weakening, or repealing the gainful employment or borrower defense to repayment rules abandons the Department's mission and betrays the students and taxpayers who deserve fairness and effectiveness in the American education system. The gainful employment rule provides students with essential information to choose a career education program that will meet their needs. The transparency and accountability it creates is valuable both for potential enrollees, as well as the taxpayers that provide billions of dollars into these programs every year.

Lobbyists for for-profit colleges often spin the gainful employment rule as a limit on accessed institutions.

But as champions of education and as stewards of taxpayer money, the measure of our success is not the quantity of career education programs supported by federal dollars, it's the quality of instruction and outcomes that these programs provide.

Any program that leaves students with more debt than they can pay and fewer job prospects than they were promised is not deserving of taxpayer support. The gainful employment rule is critical to protecting both students and taxpayers from predatory and abusive practices.

If implemented as it should be, the updated borrower defense rule could serve an equally important function in protecting students. The new rule would provide students and taxpayers the financial relief they deserve when they have been defrauded by a school. In addition, it ensure real accountability by prohibiting mandatory arbitration clauses, which schools use to evade the consequences of illegal or unethical behavior. When an institution uses deceptive practices to collect financial aid money, the school, not the student, and not the taxpayer, should be responsible for repayment.

The administration's decision to delay and undermine accountability in for-profit education will leave many students vulnerable to predatory practices, but I am particularly concerned about one group, and that's America's veterans.

In 2014, eight of the top ten schools receiving post-9/11 GI Bill money were for-profit institutions, and two of those schools were the now-defunct ITT Technical Institute and Corinthian Colleges which, together, collected more than $1 billion in veterans' benefits from 2009 to 2015.

When veterans return home, they should be met with our gratitude and support. Instead, too many are met by an army of for-profit recruiters seeking to cheat them out of the education benefits they earned through their service. By delaying the gainful employment and borrower defense rules, the Department of Education is putting the interests of for-profit companies above the interests of student veterans. I was struck by Secretary DeVos's recent characterization of these rules as burdensome on for-profit institutions.

The true burden we should be discussing today is the burden placed on Ruben Marlong (phonetic), a veteran from southern California who enrolled at ITT Tech because he was promised that is credits were transferrable and the school's accreditation was secure, only to discover that neither of those promises were true, or the burden placed on Jose Morales, also a veteran, who was recruited by DeVry University on the promise of a scholarship that never materialized, leaving him with a balance he couldn't pay.

Regulatory weakness, not regularly overreach, has created a business model that does not work for students, veterans, or taxpayers. We need to keep the gainful employment rule. We need to keep borrower defense. If you take one thing away from my comments, I hope it is this. The Department of Education is not responsible for protecting fraudulent for-profit companies. It is responsible for protecting students and taxpayers, by holding for-profit colleges accountable for unethical and illegal practices. Thank you for your time, and I hope that you will decide to implement and keep these rules. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Jennifer Diamond.

MS. DIAMOND: Good afternoon. My name is Jennifer Diamond. I'm here on behalf of the Maryland Consumer Rights Coalition. We are a statewide coalition of individuals and organizations that advance financial justice and economic inclusion for Maryland consumers through research, education, direct service, and policy advocacy.

As an organization that represents Maryland consumers, including our state's borrowers, we're here today to strongly oppose any weakening of the gainful employment regulation or borrower defense rules. American policymakers have been touting an education gospel, that education is the way to success, with students for generations. While many schools and career training programs have helped elevate its students to reach success, predatory for-profit schools and bad actors in the education marketplace have been cashing in on students' dreams. It's up, now, to the Department to uphold the strong gainful employment and borrower defense rules to make sure that cannot happen any longer.

Drawing on our research and organizing efforts in Maryland, I'd like to tell you why preservation of these rules is so important to us and to Maryland students. Well over half of Maryland students take out student loans in order to complete an education. On average, our students borrow approximately $27,000. The students with whom I work, in particular, in Baltimore, make up some of the lowest income of Maryland's graduates.

Many are from the city. Many grew up in low-income areas. Many are first-generation college students, and nearly all of them have been targets of a predatory for-profit college or career program. Last year, we released a report called Making the Grade that looked at cost, graduation, and employment rates across for-profit colleges and private career schools in Maryland. The report also included qualitative analysis drawn from focus groups I conducted with former for-profit school students. Our report findings concur with what many other students on the federal level have done.

We found that these schools cost three to five times more, on average, than their public counterparts in Maryland, did a far worse job of getting students living wage employment post-graduation. In Maryland, we found that only 33 percent of students pursuing a Bachelors degree at for-profits reached graduation, and overall, only 58 percent of students in for-profit schools in Maryland who managed to graduate found employment.

We know that these schools spend millions marketing to low-income students, people of color, and veterans. In Maryland, of the total number of African-Americans enrolled in post-secondary education, 62 percent were enrolled at for-profit and private career schools, even though African-Americans only make up 30 percent of the population in our state. In communities where wealth building is more critical, predatory for-profit schools are building a legacy of debt. I want to tell you about one woman I worked with, Ms. Norris, who signed up for a for-profit beauty school to pursue a dream of becoming a hairdresser. She looked at other schools, but none made as direct a promise about job placement rates, education opportunities, and the success of graduates.

She was a first-generation student to pursue higher education, and they told her a lot during a rushed recruitment process, but they did not tell her that no one on staff was dedicated to helping place students in jobs. There was no one to complain to on staff about a myriad of problems that arose, including a never-ending cycle of unprepared teachers, and the fact that the certification she was preparing for in school was for a Minnesota certification test, not a Maryland test.

Upon graduation, Ms. Norris found herself unprepared to pass that Maryland test, without a job, without a certification, and with over $10,000 in student loans she had no way of paying off. Her story is just one of thousands in Maryland like it, one of many more throughout the nation. For-profit schools are harming our most vulnerable students, those with the greatest yearning for the American dream and the least amount of means to pursue it. These rules protect students like Ms. Norris. They put in place clear guidelines for institutions and allow the Department to put an end to bad practices.

If schools are simply doing their job in fulfilling the mission they set out to pursue, they'd have nothing to worry about. But when they begin harming students, these rules create a recourse. In particular, I'd like to point out the importance in the borrower defense rule's protections of arbitration and students' access to courts.

Had arbitration clauses not stopped them, the thousand students who were attending ITT Tech in Maryland at the time of its disorderly closure in 2016 could have joined together to condemn them for proven fraudulent practices. Instead, they're left repaying student loans to a school that defrauded them. There's too great a risk in delaying or dismantling these critical rules. Doing so would signal to predatory educational institutions that the doors have been opened to them, and the American dream of educational attainment is fading farther into the background. Thank you for your time.

MS. WEISMAN: Alegra Howard.

MS. HOWARD: Good afternoon. My name is Alegra Howard, and I am with Consumer Action. Consumer Action is a national non-profit education and advocacy organization that works to empower low and moderate income, limited English speaking, and other under-represented consumers nationwide, since 1971.

I am here to day on behalf of consumers to convey Consumer Action's strong support for the continued implementation and enforcement of the gainful employment and borrower defense to repayment rules.

These rules contain critical accountability measures that are designed to protect students and taxpayers from crippling student debt and waste, fraud, and abuse in taxpayer-funded higher education programs. The Department of Education's recent announcement to delay most of the borrower defense rule was made without soliciting feedback from stakeholders or the public. Consumer Action opposes the Department's plan to replace the borrower defense rule and abandon critical federal protections that were set to go into effect on July 1st. Consumer Action opposes all motions to delay, weaken, or repeal the gainful employment rule, incentive compensation, or recent borrower defense to repayment and college accountability regulations.

Consumer Action believes in doing so, the Department of Education is violating current federal law. The Department's intent to establish a new, and in our view, unnecessary rulemaking process provides no basis for the Department to refuse to implement and enforce the existing finalized regulations in the interim.

Pausing the gainful employment rule perpetuates an environment for unscrupulous colleges, which compete to enroll students into their program, using fraudulent and misleading marketing practices, without regard to the quality of the training, the students' preparation, or industry job prospects. In addition, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that repealing the current gainful employment regulation would waste taxpayer funds, costing taxpayers $1.3 billion of the next ten years. We believe a new rulemaking process on this matter is a waste of limited government resources. In fact, the 2014 gainful employment regulation has already shown a significant positive impact.

Colleges are choosing to eliminate their worst-performing programs and implementing internal reforms to improve outcomes for their graduates. At the same time, gainful employment has brought to light scores of failing programs that taxpayers are currently subsidizing. The borrower defense to repayment rule was finalized in October, after nearly two years of negotiations, public scrutiny, and review.

Given that the updated borrower defense regulation was finalized less than a year ago, we see no justification for revisiting it. Instead, we urge the Department to immediately implement the rule, as is, including the provisions on forced arbitration and class action waivers. The borrower defense rule is especially important for students of for-profit colleges, many of whom come from low-income communities or communities of color. Many are veterans, single parents, or the first in their families to attend college. The new rule makes it much harder for students to hide fraud and evade accountability by blocking access to the courts. No student should be asked to sign away their legal rights in order to attend college, a job training program, or a job training program with the intent of bettering their future.

It should be fraudulent schools, not taxpayers, who should be liable to repay debts incurred during useless or fraudulent programs. If Corinthian College students had the ability to sue the school for falsifying job placement records and graduation rates, taxpayers would likely not be the ones responsible for eating the costs associated with the $550 million in federal student loan discharges of the former Corinthian College students.

Lastly, on June 26th, the Department of Education released data showing that no new loan discharges have been approved under borrower defense since January 20th. Since January, the Department has only processed relief for applicants that the previous administration had already granted. Some borrowers have been waiting well over a year for this loan relief, while their wages, tax returns, and Social Security benefits continue to be garnished. We urge the Department to move forward with the processing of these loan discharges and approve the tens of thousands of applications that are still pending.

If the Trump administration is serious about helping defrauded students and protecting students from predatory practices, the Department of Education must implement the borrower defense and gainful employment regulations in full and without delay.

Each of these accountability measures is essential to protect students and taxpayers from sudden school closures and other misconduct by unscrupulous colleges and to maintain the integrity of our federal financial aid program. Thank you for the opportunity to speak today.

MS. WEISMAN: Bethany R. Keirans.

MS. KEIRANS: On behalf of Vietnam

Veterans of America and its more than 75,000 members, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today regarding gainful employability and borrower defense. The Oxford American Dictionary defines the noun scam as a dishonest scheme or a fraud. As a verb, to scam means to deceive or swindle.

Since the advent of the post-9/11 GI Bill, tens of thousands of veterans have been scammed, victimized by predatory for-profit institutions of higher learning, for which profit is the bottom line, and educating our men and women who have put their lives on the line is not a factor.

Stories of benefits wasted on bogus degree programs at such institutions as ITT Tech and Corinthian are countless. Veterans have been left holding the proverbial bag, a worthless degree, a wasted opportunity to achieve their version of the American dream, and often accompanied by a mountain of debt they had been deceived into taking on.

Where there is an opportunity for fraud, sharks and profiteers wade in, to the detriment of the students of these predatory schools. We at VVA are all too familiar with the veterans who have not, and will not, benefit from the post-9/11 GI Bill because they were taken advantage of by educational predators. Let me relate a few incidents for you to consider. Corporal Jared Toma (phonetic) was honorably discharged from the United States Army in 2005. He utilized his GI Bill benefits to attend DeVry University, starting first in Columbus, Ohio, and then finishing his degree in Westminster, Colorado.

While a student at DeVry, Jared encountered numerous issues, including key courses being removed from the advertised curriculum. Jared shared his concerns with several administrators, but was reprimanded for doing so. Despite recruiting promises, few of his professors had real-world experience, and he learned that his DeVry credits would not be accepted by other accredited universities.

Jared's only option was to stick it out and finish his degree with DeVry, since transferring elsewhere put him at risk of losing all of his credits and his used educational benefits. Jared graduated from DeVry in 2015 with a Bachelors of science in electronics engineering technology, and while he is employed, he is not in the industry that he was trained for, and his hourly wages net significantly less income than those in his industry. As a result, he struggles to pay his monthly bills, and because his debt to income ratio is so high, he has been unable to obtain a loan to buy a home for his wife, 9-year-old daughter, and 3-month-old son.

Jared's borrower defense application was submitted in 2015, and he is now on his second year of forbearance on student loans. Petty Officer Second Class Ryan Peterson, whose name I have changed for his security and privacy, he served ten years in the United States Navy. After being honorably discharged in 2004, he utilized his Montgomery GI Bill education benefits to attend ITT Technical Institute.

Although Ryan graduated near the top of his class, he has since been unable to transfer his ITT Tech degree to any other institution. Ryan is currently employed with the Department of Veterans Affairs and recently enrolled in public service loan forgiveness for federal loans he received while attending ITT Tech. Having used the entirety of his GI Bill benefits, he cannot continue his education, and instead faces years of loan repayments with a degree that holds no value. Sadly, it is obvious to us that the Education Department is reversing field in the effort to protect veterans who have been scammed, often while turning a blind eye to what has documented for years, both by the government and the media, as a burgeoning problem.

By undermining the gainful employment regulation that enforces the Higher Education Act's requirement that all career education programs receiving federal student aid prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation, and by loosening limits on the ability of schools receiving federal student aid to use pre-dispute arbitration clauses and class action waivers to evade accountability, this Department is doing a disservice to its student veterans.

I stand before this body today to remind you that this is not what helping veterans through higher education is about, and that it's time to clamp down and increase protections for both students and taxpayers. Thank you for the opportunity to speak today, and I urge you to consider how these regulations directly affect the livelihood of our veterans and their families. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Johnson M. Tyler.

MR. TYLER: Good afternoon. My name is Johnson Tyler. I'm one of 350 attorneys at Legal Services of New York City. We are the largest provider of legal services in the country, serving over 80,000 low-income New Yorkers annually.

I am a student loan lawyer. Every day, I deal with borrowers, some of whom have been scammed by for-profits. They have no skills; they have very high debt. My office is in Brooklyn. Down the road from me in Brooklyn is ASA College. I'm focusing today on ASA College because I know it, but it doesn't get the publicity that ITT Tech gets.

It doesn't get the publicity that other for-profits do that are prosecuted by state attorney generals. It earns, every year, $73 million accepting loans from the Department of Education and grants, as well as from New York State, serving 10,000 students. I have students who are borrowers who come in there. They have no earning capacity. It struck me over and over again -- years and years I say to myself why is it that this place can just keep going? Why doesn't the Government cut off the money? The reason is the only metric that we have now, and that we have now because the Trump administration has withdrawn gainful employment, is the cohort default rate as a means to withhold federal funding.

Otherwise, you've got to get a state attorney to come in there and prove fraud, which is very time consuming. Why doesn't cohort defaults work? Cohort defaults is a meaningless metric these days. It's designed to pull federal funding when a large number of your borrowers stop paying.

With income-based repayment, it is completely legal for schools like ITT Tech, who did this, to hire people to get people into income-based repayment plans. They are no longer going to be in that cohort default. If you look at ITT Tech, their cohort default rate was 19 percent. That was in the safe area. If you look at Corinthian, it was below that, as well. If you look at ASA College, which has been taking your and my money for years, their cohort default rate is 10 percent. They're completely clean. If there's no regulation, how are these schools going to be closed down? The gainful employment rule really is a game changer in this way. I turn again to ACA College. In 2017, the first Scorecard came out. ASA did really poorly. They had ten programs.

Eight of those programs are either failing or in the zone of failing. They've got to change their game. They probably have been changing their game, trying to ensure that they keep getting the money in the future, probably improving the instruction, which is what we want them to do.

But now they can just sit back and forget about it. That is a real shame because our taxes are going to schools like that, and borrowers are stuck with these debts, as well. As I mentioned, again, I focused on ASA not because they've been highlighted in the media or anything like that. They are a typical program, but they are a very big program. Gainful employment is a very important, game changing method by which it would be much easier to police for-profits that are preying on low-income people and burdening taxpayers with debt, too. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Ashley A. Riech.

MS. REICH: Good afternoon, everyone. My name is Ashley Riech. I'm the senior director of financial aid compliance and state approvals for Liberty University, located in Lynchburg, Virginia.

We serve students from the associate's degree all the way through doctoral programs, and we also have over 50 certificate programs, which is why gainful employment is a topic of mine that I'll discuss today. I've been working in financial aid for over ten years now.

I've worked in pretty much every area of financial aid, from state and federal grants, and most recently, my responsibilities include all of the university compliance, as well as program integrity and state authorization. I'm also very active within my state organization, VASBO, and have served on the board there for many years in different capacities. I'm very grateful for the opportunity today to advocate for specific topics of gainful employment, borrower defense to repayment, and state authorization. These are topics I'm passionate about and want to see done right for our students, and I look forward to negotiated rulemaking sessions that will take place later this year.

If any of the gainful employment or borrower defense to repayment regulations remain in the future, they must be crafted in an equitable manner and ensure that institutions do not inherit an unnecessary administrative burden. The concept of the gainful employment regulations provide students with the access to quality higher education.

However, they have been an administrative nightmare for schools. Even when they're implemented, they only provide only partial information that varies in scope by sector. On a personal note, I've been knee-deep in the task of ensuring our institution's gainful employment disclosures are accurate and completed on time. The current disclosure template requires a program by program manual update and is overly burdensome for institutions. There are many technological enhancements being made at the department level that could be explored to possibly provide a mass upload option for these templates if gainful employment requirements remain. This would at least create a timely and uniform process for institutions, while still providing the students with the required disclosures.

As for the borrower defense to repayment regulations, I'm requesting the Department review, in earnest, the concerns put forth by many attorneys, who argue the latest regulation changes actually place students at a disadvantage, as compared to the original '94 borrower defense regulations.

A number of legal professionals have brought up the concerns about the new rules effectively demolishing the older rule's protections that currently apply to students seeking relief under the borrower defense to repayment.

As a result, there's an already established legal precedent for student borrower loan relief. In addition, the Department already has the authority to investigate these situations long before borrower defense regulations. In fact, the Department is mandated, by law, under Section 498(a) of the Higher Education Act, to conduct program reviews and give priority for program reviews to institutions of higher education that are reported to have deficiencies and that may pose a significant risk of failure to comply, among other reasons.

Regarding state authorization, I recognize that this particular item is not on the docket for negotiated rulemaking at this time; however, the regulations for state authorization are set to be effective in July 1, 2018, and have similar issues as gainful employment, borrower defense, and the recently delayed cash management disclosures.

It's understood that states will be afforded the same opportunity to enact their own requirements for institutions not within their state, which begs the question of why the Department needs additional oversight. In addition, the duplicative disclosure requirements for state authorization need to be reviewed. There are multiple portals and reporting methods for the gainful employment disclosure forms, net price calculator, College Scorecard, NCES and IPEDS, the federal shopping sheet, data points provided on the FAFSA, state level reporting data, annual consumer disclosure reporting, and the looming cash management and state authorization disclosures.

There must be a more efficient and uniform process to report the required disclosure information by institutions, without accessing multiple portals to provide duplicative data, in order to guarantee that students are giving clear, accurate, timely, and applicable disclosures, in order to make an informed decision on their pursuit of education.

In closing, our institution will be submitting more detailed comments on all the topics discussed to help provide guidance prior to the negotiated rulemaking sessions. I thank you for your time and consideration today.

MS. WEISMAN: Megan Coval.

MS. COVAL: Good afternoon. On behalf of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, I thank you for the opportunity to comment on the Department's proposal to reopen negotiations on borrower defense to repayment and gainful employment. NASFAA represents financial aid administrators at nearly 3,000 colleges and universities across the country. I'll first speak about borrower defense and financial responsibility. NASFAA supports the intent to hold schools engaging in fraudulent activities accountable.

We also believe that there is merit in examining the fiscal strength of institutions to ensure that taxpayers are not fully on the hook in case of a school closure. However, a finer balance must be struck between holding institutions financially accountable and the federal government potentially pushing them into closure.

To that end, our first and strongest recommendation is to separate financial responsibility issues, including possible triggers for pre-emptive action, from borrower defense. Ed should establish a committee only for financial standards with negotiators who have solid expertise in that area.

Financial responsibility is a major factor of institutional eligibility and should be isolated from narrower issues. We are troubled by the long-standing criticisms of current financial standards. NACUBO and NAICU are experts in this area for non-profit institutions, and our second recommendation is to urge the Department to consider carefully their advice. Steps to protect the federal interest should be taken only when a clear and imminent threat is detected by thresholds to which expert parties agree.

Our third recommendation is to expedite processing of borrower defense claims under rules equally applicable to both parties. We continue to support Ed's goal of expediting discharges for borrowers harmed by school closure, substantial misrepresentation, or other clear cases of authorized discharge. Delays in making those former students whole only exacerbates the harm already done to them.

However, the process should apply the same rules, to the extent possible and reasonable, to both parties in any dispute over fraud or liability. Related to misrepresentation, we recommend that Ed should be transparent in applying their rules and should carefully monitor their use for fairness and consistency. Rules against misrepresentation are a key element in student protection and in ensuring proper stewardship of public funds. NASFAA has long supported strong rules regarding intentionally deceitful or misleading practices. Borrower defense and recovery of discharged loans from schools that misled students rely on balanced, but enforceable, misrepresentation rules.

We believe current regulations do not need further strengthening, but just as schools must be scrupulous in the integrity of information that informs a prospective student's decision to enroll, so must Ed be vigilant and fair in a reasoned approach to applying those rules.

Moving on to gainful employment, we support defining the term, but wish to point out that given the widespread ramification on program and institutional eligibility, it is our strong preference that Congress weigh in on what it deems appropriate to measure whether a program leads students to being gainfully employed. There has been significant burden on schools to implement this regulation, and re-adjudicating it just adds to more administrative costs, unpredictability, and most importantly, a diversion of institutional resources away from students. We believe a new gainful employment regulation should be grounded in the following two principles. First, a recognition that proxies will always be imperfect, and leeway should be built in to recognize that fact.

Second, that any accountability metric must be completely transparent and challengeable by an institution. We offer the following three recommendations. One, design metrics that are appropriate to the academic level and purpose of the program. A major deficiency of Ed's definition is that it makes no effort to distinguish among the wide range of non-degree programs.

For example, it makes no sense to use the same major of effectiveness for a program that seeks to instill basic trades in students who never completed high school, and a program that seeks to refine a graduate student's field of expertise. Metrics, or even the need for any, should be appropriate to the academic level and purpose of the program. Recommendation 2, reconsider automatic waivers and exemptions. For example, in the preamble to the final rule, Ed stated we will continue to consider ways to recognize exceptional programs. We ask what progress has Ed made in that endeavor? Recommendation 3, reconsider alternate definitions in metrics.

For example, Ed stated that further study is needed to adopt a program-level cohort default rate, a metric that takes into account the outcomes of the students who do not complete a program, or other metrics based on CDR. We ask, again, has Ed undertaken such studies?

We offer more examples in our written comments. Finally, whatever regulations are promulgated related to gainful employment, there must be significant implementation time, with adequate testing, in order to avoid the major problems that occurred in last time's rollout. We are appreciative of the opportunity to weigh in. Thank you for your time.

MS. WEISMAN: Our last speaker before the afternoon break is Charlie Modica.

MR. MODICA: Hi, my name is Charles Modica. I'm the chancellor and founder of St. George's University in Grenada, West Indies. I'm the chancellor because I am the founder 40 years ago. I have an institution that is not in the zone, or anywhere near it, in fact. At the same time, it is a for-profit institution. After hearing some of the young people here this morning who have had horror stories about their lives being ruined by the for-profit industry, I have to say I denounce those institutions that took advantage of them in a fraudulent manner.

I participated in the negotiated rulemaking a number of years ago, and I have thought about some of the comments this morning and recognize that perhaps the high interest rate all of our students are paying now, in whatever institution they are in, should have a portion going to those people who were victimized by a set of regulations that did not provide protection for those people.

Our school of medicine has a default rate not only not near the zone, but actually above the U.S. schools -- below the U.S. schools, I should say, of 1 percent, a school of veterinary medicine one-ups that, zero. Our average graduation rate in our M.D. program, including transfers to U.S. schools, which we consider touchdowns, is about 88 percent, and in the veterinary school, it's about 90 percent. We have students from all over the world, and in the last six years, we have provided more physicians to the United States of America workforce than any other single American medical school.

In fact, we have provided more physicians to the United States of America workforce than any other single school in the world. I'm here witnessing a dilemma between the for-profit, which we are, versus the not-for-profit industry. There are bad actors in both, but certainly the bad actors in the for-profit industry have been highlighted, and they should have been.

I've served on not-for-profit boards of a university and college in the United States. I was the chair of a not-for-profit university board for many years. I believe tough rules, with further refinements that include all institutions are needed. Even if a short delay for implementation is the result of this, if it results in more inclusive regulations that protect all students, it's worth it. We should not look to where they went to school or the nature of that institution as for-profit or not-for-profit. We should look at the student, his or her life after they leave that institution. Is their degree worth anything? Is the job marketplace so bad that they have nowhere to go? It doesn't matter what type of institution they went to; it matters the program they went into and their expectancy as they enter it.

I say let's expand and broaden the positive effects of these regulations, whether that takes a short delay to implement or not. I'm not sure what the secretary will do, but if she does need to delay these regulations to expand and broaden them to all institutions, this will be a win-win for the young men and women who are about to enroll institutions in the next number of years. I'd like to volunteer to become another negotiated rulemaker if that should be. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: That concludes our speakers for the first half of the afternoon. We do have numerous blocks still available to speak for the afternoon session, after our break. Please see the staff at the front desk if you'd like to sign up for a time to speak, if you have not done so already. Otherwise, we will extend our breaks. But at this time, we are schedule to come back at 2:45. We'll resume at 2:45 with our next speaker.

MS. WEISMAN: We are ready to resume for the afternoon. Our first speaker is Liz King.

MS. KING: Hi. My name is Liz King, and I am the director of education policy for the Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights in Washington, D.C. We are a coalition charged by our diverse membership of more than 200 national organizations to promote and protect the civil and human rights of all persons in the United States.

Through advocacy and outreach to targeted constituencies, we work toward the goal of a more open and just society, an America as good as its ideals. The civil rights community has long recognized equal educational opportunity as central to our struggle to achieve equality for all Americans. The Higher Education Act of 1965 provides the framework for the college access and success vital to social, political, and economic opportunity for all people. Originally passed on the heels of significant civil rights legislation, including the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Higher Education Act is a civil rights law, and regulations governing the implementation of the law's most recent reauthorization should preserve that legacy.

or those from low-income families, the challenges are different than they were in the 1960s, but the stakes are at least as high.

The federal government's investment in students' futures and the economic health of our nation, through the Higher Education Act Title IV financial aid program, is premised on the idea that students are receiving an education of sufficient quality so as to justify the expense. The student loan program specifically presumes that a higher education raises a student's earning power sufficiently to allow for debt repayment. In response to for-profit colleges' wide-spread abuse of the federal investment in higher education and the devastating impact on students newly trapped in debt for worthless courses, the Department of Education rightfully intervened, through the regulatory process, to ensure the implementation of the law consistent with Congress's intent and the stated requirement that programs provide students an education, which would allow them gainful employment in a recognized occupation.

While there are far too many examples of profit motive leading to the exploitation of lower income people, who are disproportionately people of color, the federal government's facilitation and complicity in this instance creates a unique and urgent obligation for the Department of Education to intervene.

The civil rights community fought hard to ensure the Department of Education published regulations protecting students from the exploitative practices of too many for-profit colleges. In a 2014 brief co-authored by the Leadership Conference, Children's Defense Fund, the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights under Law, the Center for Responsible Lending, MALDEF, NAACP, the National Council of La Raza, and the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, we demonstrated that African-American and Latino students were over-represented in for-profit colleges, institutions where students were much less likely to graduate, much more likely to incur high debt and default than their peers at other schools

These realities combine to trap students of color in debt for a high cost, low quality education that often fails to aid them in obtaining a well-paying job in the field for which they went to school. A situation only possible through the exploitation of a law meant to serve the very students these institutions are harming.

In that brief, we called for a strong gainful employment regulation that protected students and curtailed abusive practices used by these institutions. We urge the Department not to reopen and weaken the rule and, instead, to robustly enforce the laws and the regulations protections on behalf of marginalized students. Despite spurious claims to the contrary, for-profit colleges do not serve Black and Latino communities. These companies profit from deep cultural commitments to education, students' belief that the Department of Education would only make financial aid available for worthwhile programs, and the determination of students to make a better life for themselves and their families.

In the name of these students and their families, the Department must preserve this regulation and protect students. In addition to the gainful employment regulation, we urge the Department, in the strongest terms, to preserve the borrower defense to repayment regulation. This regulation similarly provides needed protection for borrowers who are the most likely to be misled and taken advantage of.

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. KING: Denying wronged students access to the courts, as forced arbitration would do, is a fundamental denial of their access to the basic structures of democracy. Similarly, creating leniency for fraudulent institutions, those institutions that have violated the law, serves only to undermine the fundamental purpose of the underlying statute and betrays the Department's obligations to students. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Alexis Goldstein.

MS. GOLDSTEIN: Thank you for giving me this opportunity to read some stories that I could not fit in my first testimony, since we have some openings in the schedule. This is from Edward Harlovic. He attended the Art Institute. He writes, quote, the decision to continue my education pushed me down from the middle class into poverty.

I graduated with honors in 2013, with a BS in photography from the Art Institute. I pursued my education with a single-minded focus and determination. Shortly after I graduated, I was hired under false pretenses for a, quote, Google-trusted agency, end quote, where I worked unpaid overtime, bought my own equipment, over $1,000 of my own equipment, and was never reimbursed for business expenses.

The working environment was terrible, and I was laid off. I spent four years of my life and invested tens of thousands of dollars just to be hired for a temporary job that didn't even require a college education, for a company that violated the law. I have nothing to show for my hard work but misery and shame. I am currently on food stamps and am working an $11-an-hour job unrelated to my field of study, which requires no post-secondary education. I was exploited, manipulated, and coerced for someone else's personal profit, to my detriment and at my own expense.

I gave my very best and only received the worst of the worst in return. I can never get back all the time and energy that I put into my, quote, career at the Art Institute, but I can honestly say the decision to pursue my education was not worth it. Please help me move forward and put the past behind me.

Teddy Billiot, who is living in Montegut, Louisiana, writes, quote, back in 2010, I decided to go back to school for Homeland Security, through Everest University online. I received my associate's degree in 2013, and since then, it's been a total nightmare. Corinthian left me deeply in debt for a worthless degree. Corinthian may have filed for bankruptcy protection, but students cannot declare bankruptcy on their loans. I am still liable for my debts, despite the fact that Corinthian broke the law. It is very important for students to get the help they need when it comes to corruption of this magnitude. Every time my representatives are up for election or re-election, one of the first things they say is that they're going to clean up corruption.

Well, Teddy writes, start with the Department of Education. Natalie Curiel writes, quote, I want to know why it's taken over two years now that my borrower defense application to be reviewed and processed. I was defrauded by Corinthian since the first day I walked into the building. I was a high-school dropout, without a GED, and the first lie I was told was a promise to help me study and take my GED test before finishing my program.

To this day, I do not have a GED or a high-school diploma, but I owe over $40,000 to a so-called college, under the name of Everest Ontario Metro. Edward Mariano writes, quote, I graduated in August 2008 from ITT in Liverpool, New York. The experience was not what I was promised. I was promised a job starting out in the mid-$400,000 as a network administrator. I was promised expert instructors and hands-on training on current hardware and software, and I was promised that they had a record of 80 percent job placement.

I graduated with perfect attendance and a 3.92 GPA. GPA is pretty much meaningless from there because they pass almost everyone if they show up at least half of the time.

After I graduated, they called me constantly and wanted me to come down and sign some paperwork saying that I got a job in my field of study, but I was in the roofing business. My course of study was computer networking systems. Repeatedly, instructors were not know how to do the stuff they were trying to teach us and would confuse the class.

They had a math teacher that relied on students to explain how to do the work because the instructor had no clue how to do the math, which made it extremely difficult for me because I had been out of school for so long. Exams were open book because they never knew what the heck they were teaching, so half of the students didn't know the material. My total debt on student loans, as we stand today, is $62,000 for a two-year degree, and this is after I've been in wage garnishment for four years, and my income taxes have been taken every year. Only in this country are taxpayers forced to bail out the banks at their expense, and then also, I'm forced to pay back ridiculous loans, interest, and fees. I'm getting penalized every way around. My credit report is ruined.

I had to file bankruptcy, and I'm still in a debt that will haunt me for the rest of my life, all for a two-year degree that was pushed on me from early childhood. You must go to college. You will never get a job without college. They forgot to tell me about all of the predatory college scams and the ridiculous costs, interest, and penalties of college.

They forgot to tell me that when the banks collapsed, I will bail them out with higher taxes, but my loans won't be forgiven when I'm jobless and starving. Chrissy Seaman writes, quote, I signed up for ITT Tech in 2007. I went to the admissions offices at ITT

Tech in Greenville, South Carolina. I wanted to get a higher education to better my life because I was on disability, as a disabled dependent of my dead military parent. I was told that ITT Tech had a 98 percent success rate putting graduates in a career of their field of study. The woman lied to me --

MS. WEISMAN: Time.

MS. GOLDSTEIN: -- in the admissions office. It was not a better education. It did not better my life. I did not get a career in my field of study, and they pushed me to take classes I could have tested out of. In conclusion, I would just urge the Department -- there is absolutely nothing stopping you from forgiving the debts of students like these stories that I have just read.

There are many more stories where that comes from. There is absolutely nothing stopping you from discharging the debt of the applications you have already received. I urge you to release information about the number of discharge applications you have received so far, after January 20, 2017, in response to bipartisan letters from the United States Senate. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: Tariq Habash.

MR. HABASH: Thank you. My name is Tariq Habash. I am a policy associate at the Century Foundation. Thank you so much for the opportunity to provide input into the Department's announced intention to open up the new negotiated rulemaking sessions concerning the gainful employment and borrower defense regulations.

Before I begin my prepared remarks, I want to open by setting the record straight on a statement from a commenter this morning regarding gainful employment. To be clear, the majority of gainful employment programs are at public and non-profit colleges, and of the programs large enough to have the data to report, one third to one half of GE programs are at public and non-profit colleges, not the 2 or the 10 percent stated this morning.

Last year, at the Century Foundation, we conducted research into the contracts that colleges require students to sign when they enroll. We identified four kinds of clauses that were clearly designed to make it difficult for students to pursue complaints or to provide public disclosure of the disputes. We found forced arbitration clauses that prevent students and former students from going to court. We found clauses that prevent students from teaming up with one another when they have similar complaints. We found gag clauses that prohibit students from telling other people about the complaint resolution process or about specifics of any final ruling, and we found clauses that force complaints to stay internal to the school.

While the clauses themselves were disturbing, as they so clearly impinge on the rights of students, what was perhaps more interesting about the findings was that the clauses were being used almost exclusively by for-profit colleges. Last year, the Department addressed some of these clauses in the borrower defense regulations.

Now, the Department has delayed, and may even repeal those changes. One driving factor seems to be the for-profit colleges' claims that the rules are unfair to them. If denying students is somehow inherent for being a for-profit -- if denying students' rights is somehow inherent to being a for-profit, then the disparate impact of a ban on forced arbitration might be evidence of unfairness. But we found many for-profit colleges that do not use forced arbitration. In fact, the only colleges that were consistently using these clauses are also ones that use federal aid, so denying students' rights seem to be a strategy specifically designed to scam more money from taxpayers, in particular.

Some industry leaders, like DeVry University, have actually voluntarily removed forced arbitration clauses from their enrollment contracts, and we believe others should follow suit. But without action from the Department, investor pressure will push for-profit colleges in the other direction, seeking to extract as much money from students and the taxpayers as possible, by preventing students from pursuing their complaints and keeping information from the Government until it's too late, as in the cases of Corinthian and ITT Tech.

The industry's claim of unfairness is a cynical ruse. Unfair is what has happened to students and taxpayers in the absence of borrower defense and gainful employment. Therefore, the Department should implement and enforce these rules in their current forms. Thanks.

MS. WEISMAN: Heather Donnithorne.

MS. DONNITHORNE: Good afternoon. Thank you for providing this opportunity to speak to you today on the issue of gainful employment regulation, revision, and the delay of borrower defense protections and reimbursement. My name is Heather Donnithorne. I am with Blue Star Families.

Through our membership of 150,000 plus members worldwide, we touch more than 1.5 million military families every year. Through our annual survey, we hear their voice, we share their stories, and then we work to advocate for and broker solutions to the challenges they face. I am here today to do just that, to be the voice of the military spouses and college-age military dependents.

Having said that, I will also tell you I'm an Air Force military spouse myself, and before the Air Force life swept me away, I had a career in higher ed for 13 years. In each of these facets, I have seen firsthand how bad actor schools have harmed military families. You see, it isn't just the veterans who receive GI Bill funds. In our 2016 annual military family lifestyle survey, with over 8,000 respondents, 75 percent reported that they had, or planned to, transfer the GI Bill benefit to a dependent spouse or child. It is no secret that the 90/10 loophole makes that GI Bill money attractive to for-profit schools.

Because military families are frequently moving, and because we live in a time where dual income households are essential to financial security and the ability for families to thrive, we have found that military spouses often seek out the certification and quick degree programs that for-profit colleges, many of them online, offer.

This all culminates into a perfect storm. Research backs this up. Four of the top five reported military spouse careers were certification and licensure employment, mainly in the fields of healthcare, administration, financial, and business services.

Military spouses and dependents are an easy target for these predatory colleges. These are the promised career fields/opportunities for-profit schools market. I'd love to share several of our member stories with you, but I only have five minutes. I'll share just one. Ms. Meadows is one of our Blue Star Family military spouses. She's currently in Montgomery, Alabama. Her husband is active duty. She is unable to work in the career field she trained for in 2014. She shared with me that she's in debt to the tune of $15,000 plus for a national certification as medical assistant from Fortis College.

However, her certification is not recognized as valid from this school in the State of Alabama. Not only did they put her in debt with nothing to show for it, they also applied her MyCAA scholarship, which is for military spouses whose spouse is in the earlier stages of their military career, and GI Bill funds to the cost of the training.

Here's what I have to say, in a nutshell. The families of our all-volunteer force make unprecedented sacrifices as it is.

One of the benefits that eases the sacrifice is being targeted. Military spouses should not have to experience any of this in order to fill their personal goals and accomplishments and/or to financially contribute to the essential, vital, dual-income family lifestyle that we live today. More importantly, though, should they suffer the hardship caused by a predatory educational experience, they should not, for any reason, suffer long delays in a confusing appeal process to get it corrected. Borrower protections and gainful employment provisions that address this issue on the front end are 100 percent necessary, and they needed to be implemented not today or tomorrow, but yesterday. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: The next speaker is not scheduled to speak until 3:30, but if Anthony Hardie is present, please come forward now. Anthony Hardie. Okay, then we will take a break until 3:30. Also, at this time, Anthony is our last speaker for the day. We will be here until 4:00, if anybody else would like to sign up, please do so at the desk.

(Whereupon, the above-entitled matter went off the record at 3:07 p.m. and resumed at 3:32 p.m.)

MS. WEISMAN: We'd like to resume. Our first speaker is Anthony Hardie.

MR. HARDIE: Thank you. Good afternoon. Assistant Secretary Smith, Counselor Andrade, and Director Weisman, really appreciate the opportunity to testify before you today and thank you for hosting this public hearing. I'm Anthony Hardie. I'm the director of Veterans for Common Sense. We are here with regards to the borrower defense rule and the gainful employment rule. On June 9, 2017, we were one of 31 veterans and military service organizations that wrote to both Congress and Secretary DeVos and requested a delay in implementation -- requesting that there's no delay in implementation of the borrower defense rule. There are important provisions in the borrower defense rule that are particular to veterans, as well.

Also, with the gainful employment rule, we understand that there's consideration for re-writing that regulation, and we are very concerned about this being re-written. Veterans, in particular -- not only with private schools that sometimes fail, as has happened in recent years, they not only incur debt, but they also expend their limited GI Bill benefits, or both. This is extremely concerning, so our position is that we are -- it's very simple. We are requesting no delay in implementation of the borrower defense rule, and we are requesting that these considerations be taken under consideration when re-writing the gainful employment regulation. I just came in from Florida about 20 minutes ago, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak before you today. Thank you very much.

MS. WEISMAN: Our next speaker has asked to speak a second time, due to the inability to finish the first time. We'd like to recall Charlotte Hancock.

MS. HANCOCK: Hi there. I was going to read a few more stories of borrowers, as well, that I would have liked to include in my previous testimony. Thank you. As I mentioned, I'm Charlotte Hancock. I work with Higher Ed, Not Debt, and we have heard from more than 9,000 students who have attended for-profit colleges and been defrauded by those for-profit colleges.

I'm just going to read a few of their stories. I was told that my debts were going to be one price, and now I'm at $69,000 more than the University of Phoenix told me. They also added ten more loans that I didn't know about. I was never informed. I was told once I graduated, I would be able to find something in my field. Now they told me I'm not qualified for any help with my loan. I'm stuck with a loan that the University of Phoenix made promises about, as well as Navient. That's from one of our borrowers, Milagros Hernandez. The next story is from J.P. Fullerman, in St. Petersburg, Florida.

J. P. wrote I attended ITT Tech from 2010 to 2012, for the visual communication program, aka graphic design. Five years out of college and still no job in my field of work. I shouldn't have to pay for a scam and for being lied to about my future. The next story is from Ricardo Garcia, in Lake Worth, Florida. Ricardo wrote I am a single father of two boys.

I graduated ITT Tech in 2016. I never had any help from ITT for job placement. My degree is now useless, as no one sees attending ITT as a real education because of all the fraudulent actions that went on, and I am now stuck with $30,000 in student loans and no prospect of a career in my field. The next story is from Benjamin Merrill. Benjamin attended two acupuncture schools over a period of seven years. These graduate schools are cult-like vocational businesses that delude students into believing they are entering a career paying $60,000 to $80,000 a year. The truth is that 15, more than half of the for-profit acupuncture schools, failed the gainful employment standard. There are less than 60 acupuncture schools. The one I attended, in Roseville, Minnesota, had a median graduate annual income of $16,251.

Twelve schools among the fifteen GE standard failures are suing Betsy DeVos for the right to continue living off of student debt. I went to 2 of those 12. These schools reason that graduate income is low in the first few years after graduation because former students are establishing new businesses. What schools fail to disclose to the feds, and to students, is the incredibly washout rate of acupuncturists.

Community acupuncture discussion threads have suggested that the washout rate has reached 50 percent within ten years. Research by Steve Stumpf has dispelled the fantasy that the profession is growing. Few acupuncturists ever make it to the salaries suggested within schools which would justify the debt burden taken out by students. There are also some bad qualities to acupuncture schools. The two I attended had coercive, cult-like atmospheres that supported the delusional view of the profession through contract boosterism. The teachers were either unqualified for teaching or coerced into silence concerning student achievement because they were bound to their employer.

The student clinic was a labor scam, where students were essentially used as employees, paying a business to work, all with little supervision. Grades meant little at these schools, and the students were ill-prepared to be involved in any kind of medicine. One student was near graduation when she complained about a test question in class, referring to something above her head.

It was the reference to mitochondria that had caused her such frustration. Student behavior was downright insane. Behavior that would get someone rejected from a bar was tolerated in the name of collecting tuition money. The accreditation agency, ACAOM, is a collegial style consultant that exists solely to promote the predatory school business. I learned that the hard way because I complained in writing. These are just a few of the stories that we hear on a regular basis, and we ask that stories like this not be able to continue to exist by ensuring that the regulations that had been decided on go into place, and that borrowers put first when considering this. Thank you.

MS. WEISMAN: That concludes our scheduled speakers for the day. If there is anyone present who has not yet spoken and would like to do so, you may come forward at this time. As I mentioned, it is a public hearing, and we have said that we would be here until 4:00, so we will remain at the table, in case anyone does decide to come forward to speak this afternoon. If not, we'd like to thank you for coming and presenting today and/or listening. We'd also like to remind you that when exiting our building, please do not go through the doors that are marked with the big red signs emergency exit. Please go through one of the regular exits, and if you are unsure of where that exit is, please see one of our Ed staff members. Thank you.

(Whereupon, the above-entitled matter went off the record at 3:39 p.m. and resumed at 4:00 p.m.)

MS. WEISMAN: That concludes our hearing for today. Thank you.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

PUBLIC HEARING

JULY 12, 2017

On the 12th day of July, 2017, the following public hearing was held at Southern Methodist University, Underwood Law Library, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., before Terralyn J. Gentry, Certified Shorthand Reporter in the state of Texas.

P R O C E E D I N G S

MR. MANNING: Good morning. We'll go ahead and get started. Good morning. Thank you for being here. I'm Jim Manning, Acting Undersecretary at the U.S. Department of Education, and I'm pleased to welcome you to this public hearing.

I'm joined at the table by two other department staff members, Greg Martin from the Office of Postsecondary Education and Brian Siegel from the Office of General Counsel.

This is the second of two hearings that we are convening to gather input regarding the regulations that govern Borrower Defense to Repayment and the metrics used to gauge the success of Gainful Employment programs.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: Excuse me, sir, I'm having difficulty hearing you. Could you move the mike closer? Thank you. I apologize for interrupting you.

MR. MANNING: That's okay. Increasing access to an affordability of higher education is a top priority for this administration as is developing fair, effective, and improved regulations to protect borrowers in fraud, ensure accountability across institutions of higher education and protect taxpayers.

Secretary DeVos is committed to ensuring that institutions that receive federal funds are serving the students well. Moreover, she appreciates the traditional postsecondary path is not the only option for meaningful education opportunities, and that students should have access to strong trade and vocation programs at a variety of types of institutions.

The Secretary has made clear that her first priority is to protect students, and she firmly believes that fraud is simply unacceptable. She also recognizes that last year's Borrower Defense rulemaking effort missed an opportunity to get it right. The result is a muddled process that's unfair to students and schools and puts taxpayers on the hook for significant costs. Therefore, it's time to take a step back and make sure these rules achieve their purpose, helping harmed students. It is the Department's aim and this administration's commitment to protect students from predatory practices, while also providing clear, fair, and balanced rules for colleges and universities to follow.

Thus, we approach this hearing in our upcoming negotiated rulemaking with a commitment to ensuring that every student has access to an education that will put them on solid footing for success as they define it, be it further education, a career, or entrepreneurship and holding schools accountable for practices that undercut their students and taxpayers.

We anticipate that the Borrower Defense negotiating committee will begin negotiations in November 2017, and the Gainful Employment negotiating committee will begin negotiations in December 2017. Federal Register notices seeking nominations for negotiators will be issued in advance of those dates. Again, thank you for your time and expertise to this very important process. I appreciate your willingness to share your perspectives. As to the logistics for this hearing, many of you are already signed up for times to speak, and we'll be calling your names as you have signed up.

We have many slots left today. If you have not signed up and would like to speak, please see the ED staff at the front desk and Amy will be happy to give you a time.

Speakers are limited to their remarks to five minutes for this initial round. If you get to the end of your five minutes, Greg will ask you to wrap it up. Please conclude your remarks in 20 seconds after receiving the notice. If there is time available -- and I expect there will be -- everyone who wants to speak and has spoken, we will be glad to have you come up for a second round.

Please note that this hearing is being transcribed and the transcription will be posted to our website in the next few weeks. This is a public hearing, so please be aware that there may also be people in the audience who are videotaping and audio taping.

We welcome your written comments. If you have comments here today that you would like to submit, you can hand them to me or the ED staff at the front desk. You can also post comments to regulations.gov through July 12th. We have three scheduled breaks. One this morning from 10:30 to 10:40, a lunch break from 12:00 to 1:00, and a break in the afternoon from 2:30 to 2:40. If we don't have speakers scheduled, these breaks might become longer.

We ask that you silence your cell phones while in the room. You're welcome to use your cell phones in the lobby. If you need assistance, please speak with the ED staff. Amy at the front desk will be glad to help you.

When you are called to speak, please begin by sharing your name, and if you're here representing an organization, the name of that organization. Thank you, and we look forward to hearing your comments.

MR. MARTIN: Good morning. It's nice to have you all here. I want to thank Southern Methodist University for being our gracious host today. As Mr. Manning pointed out, everybody will have five minutes to speak. When you are at the five-minute point, I will let you know that your time is up, and nothing personal intended. I do it to everybody, and we would expect you to wrap up within the next 20 seconds.

Okay. We're going to begin this morning's comments with Ms. Whitney Barkley.

MS. BARKLEY: Good morning, my name is Whitney Barkley-Denny, and I am a Senior Policy Counsel with the Center for Responsible Lending. We're a national nonprofit group that works to ensure a fair, inclusive financial marketplace that creates opportunity for all responsible borrowers regardless of their incomes.

Prior to joining the center, I led Riley Research, an advocacy on student loan issues. I worked as a staff attorney at the Mississippi civil rights law firm, the Mississippi Center for Justice. In my capacity at MCJ, I was an alternate legal services negotiator for the 2013 -- for the 2013 Gainful Employment negotiated rulemaking. And because I am a glutton for punishment, I was also a negotiator at the 2014 Programmatic Integrity rulemaking.

I am here today to strongly urge the Department to leave the existing Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense regulations in place and to enforce them in the interest of students, borrowers, and taxpayers. Further, I urge you to resolve the claims of tens of thousands of borrowers who have already filed Borrower Defense claims, making good on the promises made to those who did everything they were supposed to do in pursuit of the American dream, only to be harmed by the institutions that were meant to help them achieve it.

When the U.S. Department of Education's approval of federal loan dollars isn't easily interpreted by many as a Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval in the eyes of students and taxpayers, if the U.S. Department of Education is allowing federal dollars, taxpayer money, to be sent to a school, it must be a legitimate institution. The U.S. Department of Education should not be in the business of sanctioning predatory for-profit colleges that trap students in an unending cycle of debt. Rather, ensuring the Department of Education only allows federal loans to be sent to programs that benefit students should be one of the highest responsibilities of this administration and any administration.

Of course, we all know in this room that that calling hasn't always been met. In the case of Corinthian Colleges, ITT Tech, Fast Train, Marinello School of Beauty, and other schools that closed after years after allegations of predatory behavior, borrowers and taxpayers were left on the hook for tens of thousands of dollars in tuition that went to enrich CEOs and marketers.

Over the past several years, research from the Center of Responsible Lending has consistently and clearly found that student loan borrowers who attend for-profit colleges have more debt and higher loan default rates when compared to their public school peers. In this sorry picture of the for-profit college industry that our research revealed, it's hardly limited to just a few schools or a few states. What we are finding, as we're doing national studies as we compare nonprofits and for-profit schools state by state is that the problem with for-profit colleges are ubiquitous. They're not contained to one school or to one region, and they're not improving. Instead, they are consistent across states and across the country. High costs, poor outcomes, and leaving students deeply in debt without the skills necessary to obtain Gainful Employment.

Beyond showing that for-profit outcomes fall disproportionately on the poor, research from CRL and others have found that minority students and women, in particular, are seriously over-represented at for-profit schools. First-generation students, students with families, and students of color are better served by lower-cost community colleges and HBCUs that offer real student services and remedial classes that can help them actually complete their education at a lower cost than they are by high-cost, for-profit colleges that leave them mired in debt.

Of course, there are real people behind all of this research. In May and June of 2017, CRL conducted focus group inquiries with former for-profit colleges in Florida. Here's what some of those students had to say. This is from a guy, he was in his 20s, I would say, an African-American gentleman. "If they told you ahead of time you're not going to make enough money to pay this back, nobody would be coming. So I think they're a little predatory in that way, you know. They'll tell you every way you can get money and every form you can fill out. I think there's some responsibility there. If you are going to say, Hey, you have all this money available to you, they should also say, By the way, with this degree, you're never going to make enough money in your lifetime to pay it all back."

The Gainful Employment rules finalized in 2014 have already begun to improve outcomes at our nation's for-profit schools. Colleges have begun to eliminate their worst-performing programs, to freeze tuition, and to implement other reforms to improve outcomes for their graduates. We welcome these changes. As an example of this improvement right here in Dallas where Brightwood College is apparently no longer offering their zoned criminal justice program at their Dallas campus.

However, other Texas programs are still in trouble. At Southwest University in El Paso, borrowers pay nearly $26,000 for a nine-month medical billing and coding program that is failing the Gainful Employment standards. The Department of Education has a responsibility to students and to taxpayers to ensure that they are not defrauded when attending a Department-approved school, and if they are defrauded, the Department can and must make it right.

Perhaps Helen, another of our focus group participants, summed it up best. "My problem is that I don't feel like I have a $70,000 education. No, not at all. Even though on paper in the government computer system, it says that's what I owe, the quality of the education that I got is not worth $70,000."

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MS. BARKLEY: May I finish this one quote?

MR. MARTIN: Yes, please.

MS. BARKLEY: Okay. "Because to my employer, I am not worth $70,000. It's not about our education. It's not about the tools we are given to succeed in the world. And it's -- it's about -- it's not about making money. Well, they're the ones making money, not us. I pay $418 a month for a 2013 car which, I mean, I need it, so it's not that big of a deal but you can't -- I want to move up. I want to be a homeowner one day. I want to own things and leave things to my son one day, and you can't do that when a credit company looks at your credit report and says you make $45,000 a year, but you owe $90,000."

MR. MARTIN: Thank you. You must conclude.

MS. BARKLEY: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Thank you. Thank you, Ms. Barkley. Next will be Mr. Robert Shireman.

MR. SHIREMAN: Good morning, I am Robert Shireman. I am a senior fellow at the Century Foundation. Thank you for the opportunity to testify.

As a context for this rulemaking, I would like to offer input on the big picture as far as the laws and regulations that apply to federal college aid. We've got one set of schools that says, We want access to federal grants and loans; in exchange, we're going to commit all of our money to education and then make extra sure that we are not short-changing the public interest in all of our operations. The decisions we make about tuition, financial aid, what programs we offer, who we enroll, and how we recruit them, we will be answerable to people who cannot take the money for themselves. This conflict-of-interest wall will serve as an extra layer of protection for students and taxpayers.

Then you have this other group of schools that says, We also want unlimited access to federal grants and loans, but we do not want a conflict-of-interest wall. We want the decisions at our schools to be made by owners who can do anything they want with the money.

U.S. taxpayers finance both sets of schools, and lo and behold, at many of the schools without a conflict-of-interest wall, disturbing behavior has emerged, such as schools recruiting almost exclusively students eligible for federal aid to avoid the accountability that comes from serving employers or higher income families, charging far more in tuition than is spent on instruction, spending a huge amount of revenue on recruiting, marketing, and advertising, discouraging prospective students from shopping around to compare their educational options, making advertising and recruiting claims that are sleazy, if not illegal, denying students their rights to go to court or to join with fellow students to file grievances. Enrolling students who are unqualified or who do not understand what they are getting into, setting low academic expectations, and closing the school with little or no notice, leaving students in the lurch and taxpayers on the hook. These are problems that in recent years reached scandalous proportions.

Now, the idea that a conflict-of-interest wall can be an effective way to protect the public interest is neither controversial nor partisan. President Trump embraced the idea last month in his proposal to privatize air traffic control. He emphasized it would be nonprofit. It would be able to prioritize the system's mission, because its board would be, quote, free of any financial conflicts of interest, a conflict-of-interest wall to protect the public interest.

The repeated history of scandals in for-profit education indicates that the conflict-of-interest wall is clearly effective, but it is not required to be eligible for federal aid as an institution. So, instead, Congress and the Department have adopted numerous rules aimed at the specific behaviors, problematic behaviors, that have emerged, rules about misrepresentation, rules about refund policies, rules about the way that accrediting agencies are supposed to operate, and on and on, including the Borrower Defense and Gainful Employment rules.

Nearly all of the rules were created to address problems predominantly at schools that did not have a conflict-of-interest wall, yet most of the rules apply to all schools that want federal aid. That sort of seems unfair to the nonprofit and public schools that do have the conflict-of-interest wall, but they did not sue to stop the Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense rules. Instead, it is the colleges without the conflict-of-interest wall, the for-profit schools, who object. They want you to believe that the only thing different about them is their, quote, tax status. That would be like saying that the difference between vodka and water is just calories.

Much more important, what makes nonprofits different are the prohibitions on conflict of interests, the restrictions on use of funds and for public institutions, the accountability to taxpayers.

For-profit colleges do not have these protections, which is why they so frequently prove to be poor stewards of federal taxpayer dollars and require additional protections given the lack of that conflict-of-interest wall.

In examining the Borrower Defense and Gainful Employment rules and their effects on different sectors, the Department must keep in mind that public and nonprofit institutions' behavior is less problematic to start with because of that conflict-of-interest wall. Thank you very much.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Thank you. Our next speaker will be Nicole Hochsprung. Nicole Hochsprung. Okay. If she comes in, we'll add her. Mr. Steve Gunderson.

MR. GUNDERSON: Good morning, I'm Steve Gunderson, President and CEO of Career Education Colleges and Universities, and my presentation is a little bit different, because the June 19th call for the hearing said they will hold two hearings to discuss the rulemaking agenda, so I want to focus on what we believe should be a part of that agenda.

But let us begin with the basics. Our sector looks forward to working with you, the Department, and all parties to constructively seek a consensus policy that can guide the work of higher education in serving students. We support good public policy, advancing the interest of both Gainful Employment and outcomes for our students and the Borrowers Defense to Repayment where fraud occurs. Any regulation seeking to define outcomes for Gainful Employment must serve all career programs across all higher education; otherwise, we fail to protect approximately 90 percent of the students.

So as we begin to develop the agenda for these two hearings, we encourage the following topics. For Gainful Employment, we suggest 10 such items:

No. 1. First, define the goal of a Gainful Employment rule. Is the goal to ensure that all students gain employment in their field of study of the likely return on their investment or something else?

No. 2. Define Gainful Employment. If Gainful Employment applies only to career programs, then how does one ensure the same career programs offered by different schools are also covered?

No. 3. Design consistent application to all career programs. If the goal is to define a baseline of acceptance outcomes, how can we define and implement such baselines in the clearest way possible for students?

No. 4. Determine if the rule is meant to provide students important information, or is it meant to be a regulation determining access to Title IV? The answer to this question will lead us into the design of the appropriate rule.

No. 5. Determine the metric that provides the best, fairest, and most accurate assessment of current career programs. Imagine if a rule existed where no appeal process was needed because the same information was available to all.

No. 6. Define and develop an appropriate timetable going forward. Rules must be prospective, giving all schools appropriate time to design programs to comply.

No. 7. Design a rule that recognizes economic income disparity across the country. We know that the very same academic programs result in dramatically different annual outcomes across the nation.

No. 8. Design a Gainful Employment rule that will support efforts to meet today's and tomorrow's skilled designs and needs.

No. 9. Design a Gainful Employment rule that evaluates the total cost of the program. It is blatantly unfair to compare the very same academic programs in two different schools if one is substantially supported by public sector operating subsidies, while the other school operates with no subsidies at all.

No. 10. Achieve the right balance and benchmarks and outcomes to protect both students and also meet the increasing need for skills, access, and opportunity.

For Borrower Defense to Repayment, we suggest 12 items:

First, define the appropriate scope or purpose of a rule related to protecting a borrowers defense to repayment of Title IV loans.

No. 2. Design a rule that protects all students and all schools. Academic fraud occurs, unfortunately, in every sector of higher education.

No. 3. Articulate the basis for filing such claims.

No. 4. Design a process that can provide the cleanest, clearest, and quickest resolution of claims made by students while protecting both the student and their school.

No. 5. Develop the process for filing in full consideration of claims by individuals and/or groups.

No. 6. State the appropriate statute of limitation for such filings.

No. 7. Make clear such a rule protects both the student's right to relief and the school's right to defense.

No. 8. Develop a clear and appropriate definition of misrepresentation.

No. 9. Structure the Department's role in managing the consideration of claims to protect the due process rights of both the student and the school.

No. 10. Reconcile the use of arbitration in this regulation with the broader federal statutes that actually encourage such use.

No. 11. Limit the rule to its intended purpose.

No. 12. Again, we must design a regulation that is prospective in nature, providing both students and schools the opportunity to prepare for such a regulation before it becomes law.

We've learned much from the process and the issues related within the current regulations. We hope that we will begin this process with two important goals that have universal support. We all want to protect students, and we all want to meet the growing demand for skilled workers. These two goals should serve as an incentive for everyone to set aside the strident ideological agendas of the --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. GUNDERSON: -- and seek consensus in ways that both protect the students and enable schools to continue serving those students in achieving their life dreams. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Next, Ms. Rachel Myers.

MS. MYERS: Good morning, everyone. I'm Rachel Myers and serve as Liberty University Student Financial Service's communication supervisor and have been working in financial aid for a little over 11 years.

I'm especially thankful to the Department for having something in Dallas, as I work remotely in Lubbock, so it's not that far. Also, thank you to everyone that's here to discuss these important issues.

I believe most of us here will agree that the goal of Gainful Employment regulations are good. We want students to have access to good quality programs that have value that will serve them through their lifetimes. However, the department has failed in the implementation of Gainful Employment in several ways. The regulation has been enforced inequitably. They have failed to account fully for students purposefully taking lower paying jobs due to a desire to serve in nonprofit positions in our communities. Finally, the regulation implementation has caused a serious administrative burden and failed to properly handle data. I personally understand the programs as I have been the project manager for ensuring the institution disclosures are accurate and completed on time.

If these regulations persist, it's crucial to schools that the Department creates and releases a mass upload tool to generate the Gainful Employment disclosure forms. This one change would assist with data disclosures by saving schools valuable time and resources. There's truly no good reason for having a mass upload tool for such a simple data form submission process. I personally would rather spend my time working on communication strategies that help with smart borrowing and trying to help students find ways to repay their student loans in a good way.

As for the Borrower Defense regulations, I'm requesting the Department review, in earnest, the concerns put forth by many attorneys who argue that the latest regulations actually place students at a disadvantage compared to the original '94 rules. A number of legal professionals have brought up the concerns about the new rules and is concerned with Holder protections that currently apply under the '94 rules.

In short, the Holder rule deems that any consumer who was provided a defective or fraudulent product or service has the right to be credited back its payment when the seller has extended the credit to purchase the good directly or has a relationship with the provider of the financing.

So if the Department deems that a school's program has issued a fraudulent or defective educational degree, they already have the precedent for the borrower student loan relief. Since schools and the Department most certainly have a financing relationship with one another, because the Department is the only entity who can provide federal student loans, borrowers should be able to obtain relief through the Holder rule. As no coincidence, the Minnesota Attorney General's website specifically links to this information on a page dedicated to student loans, student loan scams, repayment and for-profit colleges.

Additionally, the Department already has the authority to investigate any school and any program at any time it deems necessary with numerous paths to identify as fraudulent or defective program. The Department already has the authority, long before Borrower Defense, to launch a federal program review. Institutions are given numerous opportunities to ensure they're providing good, quality programs, and the students are provided with multiple data points which should provide them with the ability to make a complete and informed decision on whether or not to enroll in a specific school in a particular program.

Schools already provide Gainful Employment disclosure forms, Net Price Calculator, College Scorecard, and the Federal Shopping Sheet, and data points from the FAFSA, in addition to what schools are required for annual disclosure reporting. The true obligation lies with the Department and the need for them to be willing to stop poor programs from continuing to have access to federal student aid.

I've seen firsthand what it's like for a student trying to seek borrower payment through the old Borrower to Defense Repayment rules, and the problem isn't with the extent of what may be covered. In my estimation, the issue lies with the unwillingness of the Department to close down schools that have a recorded history of abusing federal aid programs and providing their students with useless degrees.

The Department has also been incredibly overwhelmed with the number of applications that have poured in. It's my hope that the students, schools, and Department not find ourselves in the current situation we're all facing by taking stronger preventative measures.

Students, as a form of consumers, should absolutely have access to make a clear and informed decision when determining which school to attend and how to finance their education. Providing students with access to a college education in an affordable way is critical. I ask the Department not layer on unnecessary over-reporting, which drives up administrative costs that's then passed along to the students.

It's unfortunate that this regulation punishes bad-actor schools that duplicate accountability tools that ED has had for years. Even more unfortunate is the Borrower Defense burdens thousands of good-actor schools and does it very effectively.

I thank you for your time.

MR. MARTIN: Thank you very much. Our next speaker is Ms. Katherine Savers McGovern.

MS. McGOVERN: Good morning. My name is Katherine McGovern. I'm speaking for myself. I'm also speaking as a person who, back in 1968 and '69, was able to obtain a loan under this Title IV to complete my final year of law school at Georgetown University in Washington. I have spent approximately 40 years representing the interest of the people of the United States, and 20 to 25 of those as an assistant United States attorney on the civil side, which brought me into the situation of prosecuting on behalf of the Department of Education, efforts to recover defaulted student loans.

The student borrower rules are a good rule. We are -- I believe that the Department of Education is totally wasting taxpayers' money by reopening this. You've already had -- excuse me, gentlemen. You've already had almost two years of rulemakings. We've gotten through rulemaking notice. We've had comment periods. We've had hearings. We've had the actual rule publicized. It's supposed to go into -- it's supposed to have gone into effect the 1st of July. All that rule does is to level the playing field.

Now, we know that there would not be so many schools that are under attack if all these things that the prior two speakers suggested actually went to the children and the young people who are trying to build an education for the future by going to a school where they think if they borrow this money, they will be able to obtain the training to get a job to repay their loans. That's not happening.

I remember last year, one of the biggest examples was Trump University. Clear examples of why the Gainful Employment and the Borrower Defense rules are needed. It is wasteful of the taxpayers' time and money for this notice to continue. They should close it down and enforce the rule, which has already been adopted consistent with the Administrative Procedures Act and the Higher Education Act. These notice of negotiated rulemakings violate the Administrative Procedures Act because they do not comply with the very structure that the Act insists upon and requires. There's no notice. There's no opportunity for discussion. There's no actual comment hearing period. Instead, you get, now, This is what we're going to do, and you get a chance to say whether you like it.

All the people, I suspect, who spoke prior to me, because I didn't speak before, have spoken during the two-year period with the decision being made concerning the Borrower Defense and the Gainful Employment rules. We all know that those are necessary. We all know that, as time goes on and these are in effect and we see how they work for the benefit of the students, it's the level playing ground that we're trying to get, not the issues of whether or not a school thinks there's too many regulations, not whether or not people think they should be able to run a school and make a profit. We are using federal tax dollar money to finance these loans. And if you go back to why this Act was passed in the first place, it was to provide a step forward, because many, many people in the country could not get an education above high school because they couldn't afford it, and their parents couldn't afford it. And, thus, that's the way it was. Plus, they didn't know how and what kind of job to get.

So this whole effort to undo what we have already paid to have done, that is a rules -- rules that level the playing fields for our children and our young students so that they don't spend a lifetime in debt, it's ridiculous. I'm not trying to be rude to you all, but it is ridiculous. And if you are in a position that's not new to the Department, you've already been through this, so it must feel like déjà vu.

Also, the use of arbitration as a requirement in these education loans is so ridiculous and expensive and requiring a certain expertise that you have to hire a particular attorney with that training. Also, the arbitrator, who is the judge --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MS. McGOVERN: -- is hired by the parties.

The people who use arbitration frequently are in arbitration all the time, so who's paying the judge? The person you're going against, if you are a student.

Thank you for your com -- thank you for your courtesy, and I would urge you to not continue with this proposed negotiated rulemaking.

MR. MANNING: Thank you for your comments.

MR. MARTIN: Our next speaker is Jerry Valdez.

MR. VALDEZ: It's like following the preacher on Sunday morning. Good morning. My name is Jerry Valdez. I serve as the executive director of Career Colleges and Schools of Texas, which is the largest organization and association representing the nearly 150,000 students enrolled in private-sector colleges and universities in the great state of Texas. We appreciate this opportunity. First and perhaps foremost, we appreciate the opportunity of your coming to Texas. It is a gesture that we don't take for granted and very much appreciate, and we appreciate the opportunity to provide commentary.

Our organization represents, as I mentioned, approximately 150,000 students enrolled, and we provide both degree-granting and non-degree-granting training and education for our graduates, and we employ more than 250 occupation fields in Texas and beyond. We have a significant impact on the Texas economy, and, in many cases, our graduates are first generation in their families to cross the stage and graduate, and that become very proud and accomplished Texans with a first taste of academic success.

We commend the Department for accommodating the request in providing input. In past years, CTST has struggled with a rather politically driven and retaliatory approach to regulations by the Department. Such outreach efforts, including your trip to the Lone Star State, is very welcomed and an incredible gesture.

Ultimately, we seek regulations that are fair and balanced to everyone. I will speak predominantly on Borrower to Defense -- Borrower to Defense Repayment issue and let last -- or, I guess, 10 days ago, the delay by the department on the implementation of Gainful Employment speak for itself with regards to the issues that occurred there.

So, specifically, with Borrower Defense to Repayment, we seek a concise definition and applicable instances that are very clear. Such regulations should have a clear process for students and not have barriers for students being able to make claims, also, while containing a clear process for the institution to respond and seek an immediate resolution that isn't drawn out for months, if not years. A quick resolution is very important to our universities and colleges, owners, and operators.

Additionally, previous consideration has been given to accept claims by groups and not by individuals. This is a very significant concern on our behalf and one that we would stand strongly in discouraging the Department from considering. Claims should not be stacked or widely and aggressively solicited with promises of favorable outcome. It's very important that the regulations are limited to their intended purpose and not so broad that they lose meaning or could be scrupulously taken advantage of by plaintiff's attorneys. There has been a regrettable history of this occurring, not only in our state but across the nation.

Thank you again, gentlemen, for the opportunity to share our views on the proposed regulation and thank you for your outreach, again, in your visit to Texas. Look forward to working with you to achieve common goals for the regulations that are being considered and, again, seek them in a way that is fair and balanced to both the student and to the institution. Thank you very much.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Our next speaker is Adrian Shelley. Adrian Shelley.

I will point out that we do have a few unscheduled blocks here, so Ms. Shelley -- Mr. Shelley, rather, is not scheduled to speak until 10:00. So what I would do -- I'm going to ask if -- is Nicole Hochsprung, did she arrive?

Okay. We do have some people that we know are here who are scheduled to speak for the -- in the afternoon. I'm not trying to put any pressure on you. If you want to keep your afternoon slot, that's just fine. We're absolutely fine with that. The afternoon -- the situation we're in here is that we have no further speakers scheduled until 1:00, and at 1:00, we have a fairly full agenda, so I'll ask -- I'll start -- and I hate to put people on the spot like this. Actually, I don't. I enjoy it. Let's start with Mr. John White. Is he here?

MR. WHITE: Yes, sir.

MR. MANNING: Would you like to speak now, Mr. White?

MR. WHITE: Absolutely.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. Then we'll proceed with John White.

MR. WHITE: Good morning. My name is John White, and I'm with Champion Empowerment Institute. We're an organization that develops life skill classes as well as financial literacy, and we provide access to over 12,500 grants and scholarships for students to assist them with education, finances, child care, medical, housing, and other challenging areas that might otherwise get in the way of the student's success.

I'd like to talk to you over a concern of Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense to Repayment regulations. We really appreciate the Department effort to move forward with more realistic and positive definitions and calculation methods in certain portions of the regulation. The overall tone and hyper focus of one sector of higher education while looking -- while overlooking similar or, in some cases, worse outcomes among other sectors brings into question the reliability of these program integrity regulations for Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense to Repayment. If the regulations are a true measure of quality and education, they should apply to all sectors of higher education with transparency for all. And only when this is in place will our students and taxpayers' interests be properly served.

As for Gainful Employment, much of the information and the basis for opinions regarding the scope and purpose of Gainful Employment regulations has been manipulated in the press and in publicly-released information. The original informational rates were incomplete and inaccurate. The informational rates used for current Gainful Employment regulations were also incomplete. These formulas were not tested to the point where numbers made sense. Percentages above 100 percent would not result from formulas that work well.

Our greatest concern was that the former Secretary and Department continued to move forward with incomplete data for the sector that is most affected by these regulations. For some schools, between 20 and 40 percent of their data was missing. This alone was reason enough to cease publication of final regulations until a complete set of data can be provided to all institutions affected by these regulations and until those institutions are given a sufficient period of time to respond based on a full set of data.

With stand-alone metrics to eligibility, in the original Gainful Employment regulations, the criteria for passing was that the institution had to pass any one of the three metrics and in the GE 2.0 regulation language, the institution must pass two or more metrics. The pay-as-you earn repayment programs, pay or repay, sets schools up for failing repayment rates because these income-driven plans lower payments to zero or lower, often putting students into a negative amortization schedule where accrued interest is added to the principal balance of the loan and extremely costly for students and taxpayers. Depending on the interest rates in place in any given year, the students' debt may grow to completely intolerable amounts because interest is being capitalized, and we believe that this practice is prohibitive to student success both mentally and financially. Most students under these pay and repay and repay programs feel so burdened with debt that they feel defeated knowing that they have growing debt and repayment schedules that extend 20 to 30 years.

We ask that the Secretary consider changing the criteria for passing to, again, be defined as passing any one of the Gainful Employment measures if the Secretary is going to adopt similar regulations.

Sources for earnings data and appeals criteria, we ask that the Secretary consider using state earnings data and bureau of labor of statistics data instead of opening up databases across federal agencies. We also ask that the Secretary consider appeals options that address those industries where all income may not be reported, as seen in the cosmetology district. And we also ask for consideration to those students who never intend to work full-time or in their field of study.

In shorter transition periods, we ask that the Secretary consider modifying the period back to three of four years with passing measures. And the use of the zone program, we ask that the Secretary change the thresholds to include passing and failing with the original final regulatory DE thresholds for 30 percent of discretionary income and 12 percent of annual income or consider a sliding scale that considers the at-risk population of the program, as was discussed during negotiations -- negotiations -- I'm sorry -- in GE 2.0.

We also ask that the Secretary impose a cap on the amount of time for a final determination letter to be delivered to an institution. A year from the release of official data --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. WHITE: -- would -- enough time for challenges, adjustments, and appeals and would limit burden for the schools of students.

For all these reasons, we ask that the Secretary and Department work toward developing quality controls that will apply to all institutions and will support the students' and taxpayers' best interest.

Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. I'll ask, is Cheryl Kesson here, and if she is, would she like to speak now?

MS. KESSON: Sure.

MR. MARTIN: We'll proceed with Ms. Kesson.

MS. KESSON: Good morning, everyone. I would like to thank the Department for the opportunity to comment today. My name is Cheryl Kesson, and I work for Champion College Services. We are a default-prevention company located in Phoenix, Arizona.

For the past 11 years, I've had the opportunity to work with many different institutions, but I do mainly work with proprietary schools. And, for the most part, I have found that these schools truly care about each of their students and provide not just a place for education, but a place for students to feel welcomed and given an opportunity to follow their dreams.

Not every student is prepared to go to public college. They often need the attention and guidance regularly provided at proprietary institutions. While some schools in all sectors should come under scrutiny, most proprietary institutions provide quality education options geared to at-risk students in fields where important job training is needed and not being fulfilled by other sectors. Regulation should be written to address problems with under-performing schools in all sectors. It should be effective and easy for both government and schools to administer. I agree that institutions should be measured on the outcomes and successes of their graduates. However, this needs to apply judiciously to all educational institutions.

All schools, including public and nonprofit, need to be held to the same standards. It is time to dispel the illusion that public equals quality while proprietary equals substandard. Gainful Employment can be difficult to manage and often ends up being completed by financial aid staff. At smaller institutions, this takes valuable time away from them, time that could be used spending addressing the needs of their students. Gainful Employment is complicated and costly to administer and oversee and is not advancing the goals of getting properly trained people into the careers the country needs.

If the current metrics are to remain in place, then changes need to be considered. A longer period of time should be measured to determine earnings potential. It is unrealistic to think any graduate would start out in the middle to top of their career path. Graduates need to build experience. Appeals option should also be taken into consideration for circumstances which schools cannot be held responsible, industries such as cosmetology, where it is typical that not all income is reported because they may be cash pay or tip-based, and for students who never intended to work full-time after graduation in their field of study. For example, someone looking just to learn an additional skill or is looking for a part-time job.

In addition, income-driven repayment plans needs to be reconsidered. By lowering payments as low as zero dollars a month, it's setting up both the student and the institution for failure. It is difficult for institutions to obtain passing metrics when graduates are starting in lower paying entry-level positions, and it often puts students in negative amortization with accruing interest and other growing loan balances.

Repayment plans using common sense need to be developed so borrowers can develop good paying habits and steadily decrease the amount of debt they have instead of becoming overwhelmed with large balances. Options to reduce interest or to apply payments to decrease the overall accrual of interest would be beneficial and would encourage students to continue regular payments.

Lastly, we need to address the estimated 403,000 borrowers incorrectly placed into default during the loan transfers to the Department. The Department needs to reverse these defaults and clean up the credit for the victims of the loan transfer errors. These students did things correctly to take care of their loans and should not be punished.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Is Sean Marvin here?

MR. MARVIN: Yes.

MR. MARTIN: We'll continue with Mr. Marvin.

MR. MARVIN: My name is Sean Marvin. I'm the legal director at Veterans Education Success, or VES, and I'm also a veteran and a reservist.

VES is a nonprofit organization that provides free legal services to veterans who have been defrauded by their school. Thousands of veterans have contacted VES since its creation in 2012, and here's just what a few have said. "They made promises of reduced tuition costs for veterans, no application fee, guaranteed job replacement rates, programs and more. I have no more knowledge than I already had with no job and a mountain of new debt. I struggle every day to pay my basic bills with no career as they promised, and now I'm supposed to pay loans for an education that I never received."

Another, "I was told my GI benefits would cover the cost of my tuition in full, and that I would have no out-of-pocket expenses. Now, two years after graduating, I still have $50,000 left on my student loans."

And yet another, "They offer a veteran rate, but when you look at what they actually charge, it's the same as they charge everyone. When you try to get it adjusted, they make a big deal about it and ask why I care when my GI Bills pays what they bill."

In Monday's hearing in Washington D.C., a representative from the proprietary school sector noted how the organizations that support the Borrower to Defense and Gainful Employment rules regularly cite ITT Tech and Corinthian, even though those schools are no longer in business. The veterans I have quoted, however, all go to schools that are still in business.

Moreover, VES continues to be contacted by plenty of veterans who have had similar issues in schools that still operate. While ITT and Corinthian are, thankfully, no longer around, their business model lives on. Veterans regularly describe to VES aggressive and misleading marketing techniques that various schools use. They describe misrepresentations that schools make about the cost of their education, whether their credits will transfer to other schools.

Some describe bait-and-switch tactics that schools use where schools say one thing about the degree requirements when they enroll students, but tell students something different later on, adding to the debt the students must incur. Many also describe how schools make promises about their job prospects upon graduation, but promises that do not bear out, leaving student veterans with no remaining GI Bill and, in many cases, student loan debt that they have no ability to pay.

On top of everything else, typically, because of mandatory arbitration clauses, these students are denied access to justices in the courtroom.

Meanwhile, veterans who are currently contemplating going to career colleges have the limited -- have limited ability to adequately compare such schools. As a prospective law student, I was able to compare how graduates from different law schools fared at finding jobs and their average starting salaries. It shouldn't be too much to ask the same for other career-focused schools, particularly when you derive so much of the revenue from American taxpayers.

Strong career schools should welcome this requirement, given that it will provide them with a tool to better compete against weaker schools. In turn, this should lead to more students and more revenue for good schools, outweighing any associated administrative expense.

Veteran organizations have already expressed many of these concerns in writing to the Department of Education. Earlier this year, VES and 30 other military and veteran organizations asked the Department to implement the Borrower to Defense rule and to act on the thousands of Borrower to Defense applications pending before the Department, including many that are from veterans.

VES has also asked to meet with this Department concerning patterns of fraud towards student veterans that it has identified at certain schools that still exist. None of these requests have been met, nor has this Department continued the regular meetings that the previous Department held with veteran organizations. This lack of support for veterans is beyond disappointing. Nevertheless, we hope and ask that the Department establish a meaningful dialogue with veteran organizations by including them in defrauding student veterans on both of its negotiating committees. Veterans need a government that will stand up for them, just as they stood up for their country. When they leave the Service and are told that their military experience doesn't translate to the civilian world or simply want to add to their knowledge and skill set, they need schools that see them as more than dollar signs. They need schools that respect their service, recognize their talent and drive and truly prepare for their next phase of their life so they can continue to lead at home, just as they did in the uniform. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you. I might also just add that we have offices at the Department that are willing and ready to work with veterans, and I'll put you in touch with them.

MR. MARTIN: Is Adrian Shelley here?

MR. SHELLEY: Good morning. Thank you for the opportunity to deliver comments today and welcome to Texas.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. SHELLEY: My name is Adrian Shelley. I'm the Director of the Office of Public Citizen in Texas. Public Citizen is a nonprofit consumer organization headquartered in Washington D.C., and we were deeply involved in both the development and legal defense of the Borrower Defense rule and the Gainful Employment rule. We also delivered comments in Washington on Monday, and our comments will be submitted in writing as well.

The adoption of both of these rules was an important step in the crackdown on predatory schools, most of those schools being clustered within the for-profit industry. These schools rely on federal student aid and fleece their students with low-value educations. Some of these schools essentially rely on fraud as a business model, to the detriment of their students and to the taxpayers who fund student aid programs.

The Department is taking a shameful step backwards here by initiating a new negotiated rulemaking to revisit these rules and by unlawfully delaying key provisions in the meantime. Texas has students who are going to pay the price for these delays, as do other states around the nation.

I want to focus, though, in particular, on the continued need for arbitration and class-action waiver provisions in the Borrower Defense rule. I am going to refer to an example from ITT Tech, and although that school no longer exists, the past is prologue here. In 2016, more than 3,000 students from ITT were left in the lurch when the school abruptly closed and filed for bankruptcy. ITT has been dogged by allegations of wrongdoing for years. Before closing, it was being investigated by numerous states' Attorneys General and two federal agencies for fraud, deceptive marketing, and steering students into predatory loans.

Some evidence from ITT's wrongdoing never saw the light of day, because the school relies on forced arbitration clauses that are contained in its student enrollment agreements. These clauses require students to bring all future claims against the school in private proceedings with an arbitrator rather than a judge, and the odds are, frankly, stacked against them in these proceedings. ITT's arbitration provisions were particularly pernicious because they contained gag clauses which prohibited students from publicly disclosing what happened in the arbitration process.

In one case here in Texas, ITT sued its former students and their attorney to bar them from releasing information about evidence and findings from a previous successful arbitration that the student had initiated against the school. ITT convinced the court it would be harmed if the students could share the findings with their peers who might then use that information to seek their own relief from the school. And we all know, of course, how the story ended. ITT collapsed. Students and taxpayers were left holding the bag.

As of January of this year, the Department had received more than 2500 Borrower Defense applications from former ITT students seeking to have their federal loans canceled based on the allegations that the school engaged in unlawful conduct. Some of those students are here in Texas where, according to the Department figures recently released to Congress, there were more than 4300 Borrower Defense applications pending at that time in January. There's undoubtedly many more today.

We don't yet know how many millions of taxpayer dollars could have been saved had ITT not been able to evade public scrutiny of its wrongdoing through forced arbitration clauses and gag orders. But we know the use of forced arbitration clauses in the for-profit education industry continues. In a recent study, the Century Foundation uncovered more than 90 for-profit schools in the country that rely on federal aid and that had used forced arbitration clauses in their enrollment agreements.

Nearly a dozen of these schools were identified through a Texas open-records request, and a number of them do remain in operation here in Texas, for instance, Lincoln Technical Institute in Grand Prairie, Texas. They used an egregious one-sided arbitration clause that required students to arbitrate any claim relating to the enrollment agreement but kept the school's ability to sue students in court to collect on delinquent accounts. In other words, the clause would permit the school to go to court for claims it's most likely to bring, but force students' claims into private arbitration.

Another arbitration agreement we uncovered in my home city of -- the Art Institute of Houston, required students to bring all claims against the school in arbitration and expressly prohibited them from participating in class actions, regardless of whether the alleged wrongdoing harmed one student or hundreds.

There's no reason why taxpayers should help fund schools using arbitration provisions like this. Public schools and the vast majority of private nonprofit schools do not need to rely on them, and reputable for-profit schools do not either. I urge you to stop wasting government resources by revisiting these common-sense regulations. We do not need a regulatory reset here. We need the Department to stand up for rights of students over for-profit executives. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. I'll ask is Nicole Hochsprung here? No? Okay. When in doubt, always consult with your counsel, so I'm going to do that for a moment here.

All right. The situation we're in here is that we don't have anybody scheduled to speak, currently, until this afternoon. So we have a couple of options. One, I could use my fine tenor voice -- you probably don't want to hear that. So we are going to open the floor for -- if anybody else would like to make additional comments, again, we would limit you to the five-minute period of time to speak. Mr. Shireman. He spared you my singing, so you owe him a bit of gratitude.

MR. SHIREMAN: I think we should take a vote. I think if we voted, actually, people would vote to hear you sing.

MR. MARTIN: Until they heard it.

MR. SHIREMAN: So let me just start by following up a little bit on my earlier remarks. We keep hearing folks from the industry saying we want rules to apply to all. I want everyone, every time you hear that, to think, Wait, they're refusing to comply with the precise rule that has been most effective in keeping schools on the straight and narrow, and that is that conflict-of-interest wall. They want to be held -- they want everybody to be held equally, except to the most important rule and the most effective rule that is out there, so keep that in mind every time you hear them say we should apply rules to all. That's fine. I'm all for applying all rules to all schools, but let's not exclude the rule that has been most effective and is the reason that all of the examples that come up, these situations, the Public Citizen example of the school that is happy to have the right to sue the student when the student hasn't paid tuition but is insisting that the student not have the right to sue the school in the cases of fraud and abuse. It is absolutely -- that's horrible, and we have found no examples of things like that at public and nonprofit schools, and it's because of that conflict-of-interest wall.

I want to say a little bit about the repeating history that we are dealing with here. These problems first emerged with the -- after the GI Bill in the 1940s, and there was an explosion creation. The idea was, Great, let's give veterans aid to go to school, and it worked great for most veterans. But you had this subset, explosion of for-profit schools, that were created and growing. The idea was, Let's give people a voucher to be able to go to a school that has otherwise proven itself in the market. But what happens is the schools end up just serving the people with the vouchers, and the voucher -- the eligibility for the voucher from the government gives people the impression that this must be a good-value program. So it ends up lacking the market accountability from being a school that can operate -- a for-profit school that is demonstrating its effectiveness to -- in a regular private marketplace.

So very early on, after the problems in the 1940s, they tried to create kind of a market anchor to say a decent proportion of the students need to be paying without any kind of federal aid. That kind of has remained on the books, but the for-profit schools have found loopholes around it, so now, the -- so they use veterans aid to satisfy the Department of Education's requirement that there be some market accountability there. So if we're looking for ways to rein in the problems that we're seeing here, trying to repair that market anchor would be a good way to look. There have been repeated efforts.

With the scandals of the 1940s-50s, then the scandals in the 1970s, the scandals in the late '80s, all of them involved efforts to solidify the job-training aspect of things to say, Okay, let's make sure that at least as far as these for-profit schools are -- that there's something more measurable that they are aiming for, because that seems to be part of the problem, so a lot of efforts to require job placement rates. And, always, there are definitions -- there's going to be arguments about exactly how you do all of these -- how you handle all of the data. We're finding that now. It's never going to be perfect. Enormous effort went into the definitions around Gainful Employment, the definitions around Borrower Defense. It will never be perfect. But what ends up happening is because of the imperfections, the industry comes in, after a few years of implementation, when the rules actually work for a while, and the industry comes in and says, Oh, those were the problems of the past where, you know, everything is cleaned up now, everything is going to be okay, so you can relax some of your enforcement, we can change some of these rules, and as we saw in the early 2000s, you can go ahead and repeal some of these rules. And, sure enough, after the repeal of the rules and the decline in enforcement, we had yet, again, the fourth massive round of fraud and abuse by mostly for-profit schools.

Another theme through history has been trying to strengthen accreditation.

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. SHIREMAN: I think it's really been difficult to really make that work, but it's been an effort.

Thank you so much. Oh, I should mention, I am submitting a series of history papers that the Century Foundation published. They are online, but I'll also be submitting them electronically for the Department.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Is there anybody else who would like to speak again or anybody who walked in? Okay. Well, then the situation we're in is that we have our next scheduled speaker at 1:00 p.m., so we're going to adjourn until 1:00.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: We do have some additional slots in the afternoon. If anybody would like to sign up, please see Amy Wilson at the desk out front.

(Recess from 10:07 a.m. to 1:00 p.m.)

MR. MANNING: Welcome back. We'll go ahead and get started with the afternoon session.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. We're going to begin the afternoon schedule with Maggie Buchanan.

MS. BUCHANAN: Good afternoon. My name is Maggie Jo Buchanan, and I'm the Southern Director of Young Invincibles, a national nonpartisan organization dedicated to expanding economic opportunity for young people. Young Invincibles strongly opposes the delay, weakening, or elimination of the Borrower Defense and Gainful Employment rules.

Students across the country, as well as here in Texas, face a job market where higher education is a necessity for advancement, but far too often comes with costs that can cripple young adults' ability to achieve economic security in the short and long term. Both the Borrower Defense and Gainful Employment rules were needed recognition by the Department of Education of this problem. It is clear that these consumer protections are about student outcomes, not for-profit schools.

The majority of programs subject to the Gainful Employment rule are at public and private nonprofit institutions. In fact, career education programs from notable schools such as Harvard and Johns Hopkins failed the standards outlined by the Gainful Employment rule. But it is a fact that for-profit schools were disproportionately represented among those that were profiting from taxpayer funds without providing a quality education. In fact, for-profit education companies enroll only 10 percent of students nationwide, but receive 25 percent of Pell Grants and Stafford Loan dollars, and they account for 47 percent of all federal student loan defaults. Further, 72 percent of for-profit college graduates earn less than those with just a high school diploma.

Higher education should represent a promise at career advancement, a promise of buying a home in a nice neighborhood, of sending your kids to good schools. For many students attending for-profit schools, however, that promise is a pipe dream, not because of their own work ethic, but because of the school's predatory practices. The Department's decision to take action has already brought relief to students. Out of the over 500 career education programs flagged under the Gainful Employment rule, over 300 have already been shut down by the institutions offering them. This is significant progress. But, of course, that leaves hundreds of schools with tens of thousands of students with the odds stacked against them that their degree will bring financial success.

And simply because a school closes doesn't mean the problems of its former students are over. The closure of ITT Tech, for example, including its 10 Texas campuses saved precious student aid from many students and prevented them and many others from being taken advantage of. And while at the time some appeared to blame students for not being suspicious enough about the schools they attended, the confusion among former ITT Tech students on what rights they have and how to exercise them shows the need for robust enforcement of the Borrowers Defense rule.

Currently, students face an extremely slow discharge process. The Department should be putting its weight and energy behind granting individual discharge applications and issuing group discharges wherever justified, not embarking on another set of negotiated rulemaking that will yield unnecessary -- excuse me -- unnecessary uncertainty for students and taxpayers, at best, and rob them of essential protections, at worst.

While higher education has, undoubtedly, become business similar to any other, it is still a business that should measure its success by the success of its students -- and everyone has to forgive me for a little bit of paper shuffling. On my way to Dallas this morning, I was asked to share the following story from a woman unable to make it today. Her name is Brittany Prock (phonetic), and she is a Texas native who attended Corinthians Everest online in Brandon campus. She says, "I have faced a real traumatic hardship as a result of this bogus degree and insurmountable debt. I have lost my job. My home was foreclosed on during my studies at Corinthian, but they assured me my degree would improve my circumstances. Corinthian students are looked down upon and rejected by many companies. I know because I have tried to obtain employment in my field of study and have been turned down many times because a company doesn't see Corinthian as an actual accredited university. Colleges and universities won't even look at transcripts from Corinthian because of this bogus accreditation. The credits are no good and will not transfer. These schools have failed me as well as others in making sure we had a clear-cut understanding of what we were signing. I am pissed, because it was the school's responsibility to do so."

Again, we strongly oppose the delay, weakening, or elimination of the Borrower Defense and Gainful Employment rules. Respectfully, we call on the Department to, instead, enforce the existing rules and help more students as opposed to excusing predatory colleges and failing programs.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak today.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: We're going to continue with Mr. John Turnage.

MR. TURNAGE: My name is John Turnage, and I want to thank you for allowing me time to express my thoughts and concerns with the Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense to Repayment regulations.

As an owner of all or part of eight cosmetology schools located in Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, Virginia, Maryland, and Florida, which employ over 200 people and educate about 1200 students each year, I am deeply concerned with the aspects of both sets of regulations. Because of that, I'm grateful that the Department is considering a new round of negotiating rulemaking on these two regulations and hope that my concerns can be considered during the process.

With respect to the Gainful Employment rule, I recently went through the alternative -- alternate earning appeals process after receiving Zone in four of my schools. This whole process was frustrating for me because I knew that we provide our students with a quality educational experience and that they have excellent career outcomes. I knew that we exceed the required standards of graduating, licensing, and placing our students as mandated by our accrediting agency. I knew that our graduates were gainfully employed in every sense of the role. However, because the Department decided to use Social Security Administration data in determining earnings for my graduates, although they are aware that this data is heavily flawed for our predominantly cash-based industry, my schools were given a Zone program level that raised questions in the public's mind, not to mention the Department's, about the effectiveness and the value of the programs we offer. I set out to prove that the Social Security Administration earnings data used in the Gainful Employment metric was wrong and to clear the representation of our programs by taking part in the appeals process so that all programs could be demonstrated to pass.

However, the process was not as easy as it might appear on paper. It took months of hard work and tens of thousands of dollars, but we were able to show a 70 to 75 percent increase in earnings data over the Social Security Administration earnings number through the graduate survey responses. Yes, an upwards of 75 percent increase. That means for my graduates for the measured cohort, for example, an aggregate earnings number by the Social Security Administration of $25,000 was actually $43,750.

While I felt vindicated at the new data which reenforced my pride in our schools and our graduates, I was also appalled that the original earnings data were that far off and that we had been required by law to label our programs as Zone to the public.

The system is not workable, and I urge the Department to carefully evaluate how to structure the rule, if there is to be one, to account for such flawed Social Security Administration data without requiring schools to file an appeal to obtain the program status that they should have had in the first place. Even the issuance of a draft Gainful Employment rate that is failing or in the Zone without the loss of Title IV consequences is a harm to the schools who are offering a program to the students. Our resources are better spent allocated to educational services.

I care about my students. It's important to me that my schools remain in business so they continue to change the lives of students. Just last night, we had the graduation for our Dallas and Arlington schools at the Verizon Theater in Grand Prairie, where 175 students walked across the stage and were handed their honors and certificates. The pride their families felt as well as our team was evident by cheering in the over 900 people in attendance. We do everything we can to elevate the education of every person that walks through the doors.

I'm also very concerned with the Borrower Defense to Repayment regulation. The most troubling is the potential that it has to shut down schools if certain triggers are tripped, which require compounding layers of financial security. These financial securities, such as letters of credit, are expensive for our schools to obtain. We are a small family business, and while a requirement to have financial securities to cover 10 percent of the previous year's federal student loan income, would be extremely challenging to deal with, to have multiple requirements at 10 percent each would be devastating. It would have an immediate detrimental impact that could very well shut down the school completely, leaving the students with fewer options.

While I appreciate the Department included some discretion about where the additional security is necessary in the final rule, it is still ambiguous in which situations this will happen and is not independently determined. While on this subject, the final rule is also ambiguous in that it only provides conceptual examples of would-be misrepresentations sufficient to support a successful defense to repayment and potential repayment of the student loan by the school to the Department.

The Department must provide greater due process to institutions to defend such claims and more guardrails as to what is and is not a misleading statement on which a claim could be based. I say all of this with the expectation that my schools will never need to worry about anything contained with the Borrower Defense to Repayment regulations, because we do not misrepresent our programs, costs, or outcomes. However, I am not naive enough to think that our employees, as highly trained as they are --

MR. MARTIN: Time. Twenty seconds.

MR. MANNING: You can finish.

MR. TURNAGE: -- will never make a misleading statement or mistake. So that ambiguities with regulation will not be abused by someone. You cannot buy a car and two years later decide you do not want it and then complain that it did not drive the way you wanted it, so you want your money back. I would request that we be included in the decision-making and the negotiating rulemaking, as all Paul Mitchell schools across the nation. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you. And for a matter of clarification, for anyone that wasn't here this morning, there's a five-minute rule. You have 20 seconds at the end of that to wrap up.

MR. MARTIN: Ms. Audra Turner.

MS. TURNER: Good afternoon, and thank you for holding this hearing today in Texas. My name is Audra Turner, and I'm the Executive Director of the Paul Mitchell Schools located in Ardmore, Oklahoma, Arlington, Dallas, San Antonio, Texas, and Miami, Florida.

I'm here to voice my support for the Department's efforts to review the Borrower Defense Repayment and Gainful Employment regulations. Like John Turnage I, too, hope the Department will consider representatives from our Paul Mitchell School network on both Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense Repayment committees. I've been working in the hair care industry for 30 years as a stylist, a salon owner, and an educator. That experience has helped shape the remarks I'm sharing today.

As you can imagine, in our industry, it's mostly women. The reality is 95 percent of people who enter cosmetology schools are women. Many of them are single, and some of them are single mothers. Future professionals who are single often enter training thinking they will stay in the business for a few years full-time and then transition to a part-time supplemental income as they marry and have children. Yet they know they have a school that they can employ full-time that will take care of their families should the need arise.

In contrast, single mothers often enter our programs because the cosmetology training is quick. It's about a year. When licensed, a career in cosmetology offers a flexible work schedule to allow part-time or full-time as your family needs dictate.

These realities are not reflected in the one-size-fits-all approach under Gainful Employment regulations which currently only consider full-time employment to have sufficient value. The reality is the schools are unable to dictate the degree of work a graduate chooses. Again, our graduates are frequently second-income earners and decide to work part-time or not at all. We fully support these decisions but feel it's inappropriate for the reduced or missing income from these graduates to harm a school's GE ratios, especially when their household income clearly shows sufficient means to repay these loans.

I would also hope the committee will examine the need for schools to provide greater direct counseling for students taking out federal student loans. Too often, we see students who come in and borrow too much money or more than they need. Of course, some of these students need additional income to pay for rent and transportation. However, we know a few instances where they take significantly more. For example, one young woman told a school owner that the extra money from her student loans would be used by her mother to renovate the family kitchen. Unfortunately, under Gainful Employment, the school that that young lady attended is now being held accountable for the unwise and excessive federal student loan. Currently, there is nothing this school can do or say to prevent it. That's just not appropriate.

Another concern that I have with Gainful Employment is that our schools are to be held accountable for what our graduates report. The reality is that cosmetology is a cash- and tip-based industry. People dealing in cash often underreport their income. The IRS estimates a substantial chunk of our $458 billion tax gap likely comes from underreported small-business income, and especially those dealing with cash.

According to the Tax Policy Center, individual taxpayers fail to report about 65 percent -- or sorry -- 63 percent of income from sources from which there is no information reporting, such as credit cards. That is consistent with the recent results we received when we did our appeals process with our Paul Mitchell Schools. After interviewing our graduates, their income underreported -- was underreported an average of 65.5 percent across our network. To conduct these earnings appeals, we needed to call most of our graduates multiple times and were required to impose upon them by questioning their income, many of which had underreported to the IRS.

Just finding our graduates is a major task. As mentioned before, our graduates are women, and they change their names upon being married. It's often difficult for our schools in military bases, because these now married women follow their spouses to move multiple locations and sometimes abroad. These factors add significant costs in our efforts to track down and document how much money they really made. The Gainful Employment regulation has been poorly planned in its implementation but, especially, as it applies to cosmetology.

Now, I would like to discuss the Borrower

Defense to Repayment regulations. I, again, express my support for the Department's suggested review of the rules and regulations and current implementation of that effort. There is, certainly, a need for a fair process for the students and the taxpayers. We need to be protected from unscrupulous schools, but the Borrower Defense to Repayment process as established under the previous administration has added a negative effect on cosmetology schools. Lenders and landlords are anxious about the regulations that provide stackable penalties, and the risk of those penalties can turn the owners to a place where they're apprehensive about opening new schools.

I would really like to ensure that we find a solution so that we can continue to provide future generations with the opportunities that I have enjoyed in this industry.

Thank you for allowing me to speak on behalf of cosmetologists.

MR. MANNING: Thank you very much.

MR. MARTIN: Sandy Sarge.

MS. SARGE: Good afternoon. My name is Sandy Sarge, and I'm the president of Sarge Advisors, a C-level consulting firm that specializes in finance, accounting, and operations for higher education. In my career, I've worked as a stock broker in the '80s, I was an auditor and a CPA with Pricewaterhouse, and I spent over 15 years in the mortgage business before finding my passion in higher education. I am also the mother of two college students who have benefitted from the federal student loans programs.

First, I'd like to preface my comments by saying that I know that the Department of Ed does not write legislation. Congress does. But I also know that the Department is in the best position to influence Congress's thinking and is, in fact, ethically obligated to point out when legislation ends up hurting more than helping its intended beneficiaries, and, in this case, that's our college students.

With that said, I'm here to ask the Department to put the 90/10 rule on the agenda for the upcoming GE negotiated rulemaking session. I have many thoughts about how to change, improve, or challenge the current GE regulations, but first and foremost, I think we should focus on what caused us to even need Gainful Employment in the first place.

One of the key reasons proponents of 90/10 favor it is because it supposedly bars for-profit colleges from receiving more than 90 percent of its revenues from Title IV federal student aid programs.

But what really happens is that it just forces these schools to increase their tuition rates by at least 11.1 percent over whatever the average student gets in aid. It doesn't limit the school from getting all the aid, it just forces the cost of education up for students, and all that excess falls to the bottom line, thereby increasing the school's profits and perpetuating the stigma that all for-profits are greedy. Seems like this is doing exactly the opposite of what was intended and hurting students in the process.

Let me show you the math. If you'll be so good as to turn to page 11 of the presentation I handed out, that would be great. We've also passed out page 11 to the audience.

Here, I have two examples of simple income statements. The first column is before 90/10, and the second column is after 90/10. The first example assumes that a school, after doing its planning and all of its competitive analysis, decides to set its tuition at a rate of $7,500 per student. And that its costs -- it costs them $6,000 per student to run the school. That leaves a profit of $1500, or 20 percent. By the way, that presumed margin is above the current highest margin generator on the public market, which is at 18.3 percent.

Now, let's look at that same school under 90/10 where a student is eligible for $9,500 in aid. In order to pass 90/10, the school raises its tuition to $10,800. So what happens to costs? Nothing. Nothing happens to costs. Costs don't change just because tuition goes up, it stays at $6,000 in this example, so all this excess tuition just goes to profits.

Now, the school will make $4,800, or 40 percent, for no other reason than to pass 90/10. That seems crazy to me. And you know who loses? The students. They end up maxing out their aid, most importantly their loans, and still end up having to pay out of pocket. We have to find a better way.

Two of the greatest issues facing students today are rising tuition costs and high debt levels. Debt is high, because tuition is high. Tuition is high, in part, because of regulations like 90/10. Every time Congress increases federal aid, in an attempt to help students cover these rising costs, the cycle spins higher and higher. The sad thing is that the students who are hurt the most are Pell recipients, the poorest of the poor, because they get the most federal aid.

If we can find a way to solve these problems, I believe we are morally obligated to do so, regardless where you stand on the for-profit versus nonprofit education argument. I want to be part of the team who eliminates arbitrary and unnecessary rules like 90/10. I want to be part of the team --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MS. SARGE: -- who recommends enhancements to legislation that actually focuses on what is best for students. I believe we should use the Gainful Employment negotiated rulemaking session as an opportunity to dig deeper into the consequences of legislative decisions without regard to ownership structure and get rid of what's not working. Then and only then will we begin to change students' lives. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you for your comments.

MR. MARTIN: We'll continue with the Reverend Dr. Frederick Haynes.

REV. DR. HAYNES: Thank you very much. Good afternoon. I am Frederick Douglas Haynes III. I'm Senior Pastor of Friendship West Baptist Church here in Dallas, Texas. I also serve as adjunct professor at Paul Quinn College, which is an historically black college institution here in the Dallas/Fort Worth Metroplex.

Our congregation, Friendship West, takes seriously the biblical mandate to get wisdom. We understand that the success of a people, the success of a nation, has everything to do with educational opportunities. And with that being the case, our church has donated over $2 million to historically black colleges and universities. We've also donated in excess of $3 million in scholarships to our members, as well as to persons who live in our community, yet we also recognize that the Bible warns us against educational environments that prey on the possibilities of those who are aspiring to go higher in this life. And with that being the case, I rise to speak about the Gainful Employment rule and for-profit colleges.

We take the education of students and the protection of taxpayer investment seriously. As college becomes increasingly more unaffordable, especially to those who live on the wrong side of town, we have seen the rise of student loan debt, coupled with that of unscrupulous actors often found in the for-profit education industry.

Ironically, this morning, I just left a meeting -- or should I say a counseling session with one of our members, who was victimized by such a for-profit educational experience. And with that being the case, I have seen up close and personal how this hurts the African-American community from our students to schools, which have consistently and effectively educated black students for over a century.

In order to protect students, particularly students of color, the Department should enact and implement strong regulations like the Gainful Employment rule that are clear, consistent, and that provide necessary relief for students who have been defrauded by these harmful institutions and practices. Any new rules should take into account the disproportionate impact of for-profits on students and communities of color, as well as the havoc these institutions wreak on our economy as a whole. African-American students disproportionately attend for-profit colleges, borrow more, and have lower graduation rates, which makes them more likely to be victims of harm from for-profit institutions. Twenty-eight percent of African-American students enrolled in a four-year institution attend a for-profit college compared with just 10 percent of whites. This disparity is present for two-year and less-than-two-year colleges as well. Also, nearly 80 percent of African-Americans do not complete for-profit programs, so the cost of for-profit schools are more greater -- are much greater than other institutions, so a substantially greater share of students borrow to pay for their education.

The Center For Responsible Lending found that in the 2011-2012 academic year, 35 percent of African-American students at for-profit colleges, four-year institutions, took out $8,900 or more in federal loans compared to 28 percent at private nonprofit institutions and 18 percent at public institutions. For-profit college students are more likely to experience worse educational outcomes and a higher incidence of default.

Many for-profit institutions engage in fraudulent and predatory practices such as high-pressure recruitment, misleading students about job placement opportunities and salary claims for when they graduate, and supplying unqualified instructors and inadequate courses. These courses and instructors at nondegree programs inadequately prepare students for a career. The Gainful Employment rule is a way to monitor this and keep certificate programs in check by monitoring graduates' debt-to-income ratio. In the movie "Selma," there's an interesting metaphor. Martin Luther King, Jr., the drum major for justice, is speaking after Abernathy. He's discouraged, somewhat depressed about the direction of the movement. Ralph says, "Keep your eyes on the prize." Dr. King responds insightfully, metaphorically," What good is it to integrate a lunch counter if we do not have the resources to buy a burger or the education to read the menu?"

Without the Gainful Employment rule, without necessary regulations on for-profit colleges, we won't have the resources to buy a burger, and we sure won't be able to read the menu. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Continuing with Ryan Clark.

MR. CLARK: Hi. My name is Ryan Clark, and I'm coming to speak on behalf of myself and other veterans today. As a veteran with a distressed postsecondary experience, I have taken a particular interest in some of the rules at issue today.

My story begins upon entering the Army after deciding that it would be more prudent following in my family's footsteps rather than finishing my secondary education right out of high school. The opportunities provided by the military were too much to pass up for a young 19-year-old. So, of course, when I joined the Army, they decided to send me to school. I attended the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, California and later graduated from the Institute of Arabic Studies Program. After a brief stint learning my trade craft, I was assigned to an NSA billet at Fort Gordon in Georgia. While I had learned Arabic, it came to light that I was also skilled with computers and quickly became an instructor for network intelligence.

During this period, I felt that my duty to my fellow soldiers who had deployed multiple times was failing, so I took it upon myself to volunteer for an intelligence position in Iraq. Thankfully, I was selected, and while I was deployed, I routinely found myself with a few hours of spare time during my off hours given the nature of my deployment. After speaking with my fiancée about how to spend the down time, it was suggested that I should further my education. With this suggestion, I felt it best to simply pick up the same tracks I was walking when I last attended college.

I reenrolled with Devry University and began classes again during November 2010 under a condensed schedule. I felt being able to isolate classes and take a condensed curriculum, which amounted to two classes per eight-week schedule versus four classes for an entire 16-week semester offered me the best opportunity to not lose focus, both on my mission, foremost, and on my education.

The first offerings, I was granted while using the student FAFSA and completed with above-average grades. I decided to continue my degree into a second semester by using my sponsor tuition assistance. After providing all of the documentation and paperwork for the TA to be allotted, I proceeded to take additional courses from Devry. Through this semester, I returned back to Georgia, and while proceeding to enroll for my follow-on courses, I hit a proverbial brick wall.

Through a series of conversations and regulations, it came to light that the tuition assistance which covered the course rate from my previous classes was never allotted, due to the fact that the institution had not converted my accounts or received the payments. The only explanation I was given was provided by the DOD Education Department which stated that Devry never filled out paperwork to allow for the payment. While Devry consistently deferred my inquiries to another representative before finally stating that it was my own fault, no matter how much this explanation was belied by my paper trail. The cost of the contested classes was then conveyed on to me at the regular student rate rather than the active-duty military tuition rate, thus, almost doubling the cost that I was instructed to pay out of pocket.

Due to the amalgamation of horrid happenstance, I was unable to receive recourse from the DOD TA program due to the fact that a new fiscal year had begun. And while I was able to get Devry to eventually change my financial obligation to reflect my active-duty status and the subsequent rate that accompanied it, they refused to offer any further assistance in resolving my issue beyond advising the Yellow Ribbon Program. The program did not address my frustration, and as all obligation was placed upon me, I was left unable to further my education in light of this brick wall.

On top of learning of my debt, it also came to light that Devry had unceremoniously and without my knowledge, changed my major, thus negating over half of my credit hours. This was a chain on my life for the next few years until I moved to Denver, Colorado to begin my post-military civilian life. It was at this point that I reconnected with a former friend and fellow veteran who now runs Post One for the VFW who advised of a university in the Denver Metro area.

Upon enrolling, I quickly found out that the hysteria surrounding my post enrollment -- or my past enrollment with Devry was coming back to haunt me, A hold in the place of my status with Devry, and after several conversations with Admissions, it became clear that the institution would not provide my official transcripts until I had paid the previously disputed obligation. Thankfully, my counselors at Metro State University were incredible and proceeded to waiver numerous prerequisites to allow me to take my more advanced curriculum. But every good thing must come to an end. Eventually, I was advised that they could no longer continue that practice and I was, again, forced to withdraw from a postsecondary institution. To date, I still have not been able to fully utilize my GI Bill benefits without starting my education from scratch and scrapping over 60 credit hours that I obtained from Devry.

For my conclusion, I do not wish to rehash my story but convey that this is not an isolated incident. Through my distressed history with for-profit colleges, I have listened to countless other veterans' tales with abject horror at how they were treated. In my own experience, I felt it was my own vulnerability and ignorance that was exploited for --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. CLARK: -- further gains by the institution over my best interests.

This would be my true conclusion, that, too often, our education institutions who operate for explicit profit are given the benefit of the doubt that they're working in the best interest of the student who is, in fact, simply viewed as a number and an invoice.

I was an active-duty deployed soldier and still felt exploited. If this is a situation where one does not call for the increased protections provided by these rules, I am unsure how further an institution can fall before sufficient action should be taken. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Next, we'll hear from Dr. Janice Knebl.

DR. KNEBL: Good afternoon. I'll just pass those to you.

My name is Dr. Janice Knebl. I'm an osteopathic physician and chair of the American Osteopathic Commission on Osteopathic College Accreditation, known as COCA. Thank you for the opportunity to present comments on behalf of the COCA today.

I commend the Department of Education for initiating a new negotiating rulemaking process to address some of the shortcomings in the current Gainful Employment regulations, particularly as they apply to graduate and professional schools.

As the Department begins to consider the preliminary agenda for the negotiated rulemaking committees, I ask that you consider the value osteopathic medical education can bring to the nation and to strengthen opportunities to provide that education.

I'd like to tell you a little bit about the COCA. We are a Department-recognized accrediting agency and serves the public by establishing, maintaining, and applying accreditation standards and procedures to ensure the academic quality and continuous quality improvement delivered by colleges of osteopathic medicine reflect the evolving practice of osteopathic medicine. The scope of the COCA encompasses crediting COMS, and the COCA is the only accrediting agent who accredit these osteopathic medical schools schools in the United States. Currently, there are 33 accredited osteopathic medical schools operating in 48 states. This number will increase by some 25 percent as the COCA has received in 2017 eight applications to establish new colleges of osteopathic medicine and four applications to establish additional locations for COMS.

Graduates of accredited COMS earning Doctor of Osteopathic Medicine Degree. In the United States, physicians licensed to practice medicine are either DOs or MDs. DOs practice in every medical specialty, applying a patient-centered philosophy to treat their patients. DOs are one of the fastest growing segments of healthcare professionals in the United States.

Currently, there are more than 100,000 DOs in active practice and one of every four medical students in the country are osteopathic medical students. While DOs practice in all medical specialties, more than 60 percent of all DOs specialize in primary care that includes family medicine, general internal medicine and pediatrics. Osteopathic schools and training programs also represents care to rural patient population for whom gaps and access to care are much more pronounced.

COCA is pleased to support educational opportunities for future physicians in those geographic areas and in the most needed specialties and to support workforce development to address healthcare provider shortages.

And the final rule on Gainful Employment, the Department set out two metrics. No. 1, a debt-to-earnings ratio and No. 2 a program cohort default rate. Programs are required to satisfy both of these metrics to maintain Title IV eligibility under the Higher Education Act. We have strong concerns regarding the metric on debt-to-earnings ratio because the parameter that students would need to spend no more than 8 percent of their annual income or 20 percent of their discretionary income on their student loan payments is prohibitively narrow for medical school graduates.

Osteopathic medical student graduates can expect to graduate with more than $200,000 in student loan debt with large monthly loan payments immediately following graduation when they are still in training in three-year -- or more -- residency programs for state licensing and, potentially, an additional several years for fellowship.

However, as soon as they complete this training, their income will increase exponentially. This increase in income is in stark contrast to other careers which may not incorporate extensive post-graduate training. Regarding the program cohort's default rate, osteopathic medical students generally have default rates that are substantially lower than the 30-percent threshold. In fact, as far as we are aware, no COCA-accredited programs would fail this criterion.

We believe the statistic supports the value of osteopathic medical education, programs, and training and preparing high-quality medical professionals.

Additionally, we would support exceptional performer recognition to include programs with a lower program default rate than 30 percent threshold and high licensure rates.

We appreciate the intent of the Gainful Employment regulations to ensure education programs provide adequate financial value to their graduates.

Further, we understand the need to apply some criteria to programs in order to identify deficiencies. However, we caution that the current approach applies narrow criteria to a broad range of programs. We suggest that the Department consider the unique nature of certain programs, such as medical schools, and develop appropriate metrics for each category of programs. In particular, for osteopathic medical education programs, we urge the Department to either No. 1, exempt such programs from the debt-to-earnings ratio or, No. 2, only collect data on such programs but enforce new penalties where a high-quality program has met an exceptional performer threshold.

Finally, medical professionals are in short supply in many geographic areas of the United States, particularly in rural parts of the country. Federal regulations like the Gainful Employment regulation should not contribute to this shortage by redirecting qualified medical professionals away from the regions where the shortage exists. We urge the Department to review the impact of the Gainful Employment regulations on the program --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MS. KNEBL: -- To ensure that the regulations do not stifle the abilities of high-quality medical education to train future physicians. In sum, we support the spirit of the Gainful Employment regulations to provide consumers with better information about the cost of the educational programs and resulting debt. In addition, we support the goal of increased institutional accountability to ensure the students have adequate information to make choices about incurring loans to fund our educational programs.

Finally, we applaud the Department for addressing this important issue, and we look forward to continued dialogue. The osteopathic medical profession remains ready to ensure a strong physician workforce for our nation. Thank you very much.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Meredith Martindale

MS. MARTINDALE: Thank you for the opportunity to speak today. My name is Meredith Martindale, and I'm here to urge the Department to leave in place both the Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense rules. It is a waste of taxpayer money to redo rules that were thoroughly debated during the last administration. Gainful Employment ensures that schools are giving quality education to students so that they could obtain jobs after graduation that allow them to actually repay their loans, and the Borrower Defense rule is there to provide relief to students whose schools broke the law.

But perhaps the strongest message I could send in defense of these rules is through the words of students who were scammed by schools in the past. I want to share some of their stories with you today. Amy Schneider (phonetic), who attended the negotiated rulemaking for Borrower Defense last year in D.C. writes, and I quote, "I attended EDMC's Art Institute campus in Schaumberg, Illinois from 2007 to 2010 and graduated with honors from my BSA program. I was unable to gain gainful employment after graduation, and my degree is seen as a joke in the industry. I enrolled at that school based upon falsified career placement statistics, lies about the quality of education I could expect from the program, and the content of my courses, among other things like outdated materials, programs, and equipment. I amassed over $130,000 in debt at this point between my mother's Parent Plus loans and my own loans.

While these rules are not perfect, they were a compromise made after an extremely lengthy process, and they're working as intended. Schools should prove that their programs have favorable outcomes if they are siphoning federal subsidies and taxpayer money in order to operate. Schools should be required to post letters of credit so that taxpayers are not left on the hook if the school is sued. Arbitration clauses should not have any place in education. Students deserve recourse in the form of strong and well defined Borrower Defense rules.

Sandrus Fabaris (phonetic) writes, and I quote, "In 2003, my wife and I both made the unfortunate decision to attend the Art Institute of California in San Diego. I want to make it clear, the school lied to us. It was inflated false job-placement stats which convinced me to enroll, and what we experienced were unprofessional adjunct teachers, an unfocused curriculum, lack of access to equipment, and lack of job-placement assistance. It was a horrible experience which has haunted our lives and finances for the last 11 years.

To this date, my wife and I have paid $96,000 towards our loans. Due to interest, we still have another $158,000 more. We will be in our late '50s before they are paid off, close to $1,000 a month for an education that we never benefitted from. We have never missed a loan payment, but this bad debt has taken a very heavy, irreversible toll on our lives. We have moved eight times for jobs in the last 10 years. We have not been able to save responsibly. We have foregone starting a family."

Drawing out debt cancellation for students who were defrauded is nothing less than torturous and asinine. Stop hiding behind what you call process and fight to enact change. Make an immediate difference to the people you were sworn to serve. Each day, desperate people fall victim to more debt-forgiveness schemes that thrive upon your lack of action.

Mandatory arbitration clauses need to be thrown out retroactively. Blanket cancellation for defrauded students needs to happen. Title IV funding needs to be discontinued for bad actors that create indebted masses without providing them with the tools for success.

Richard Garcia wrote, and I quote, "I am a single father of two boys and graduated from ITT Tech in 2016 with an AS in Electrical Engineering. Never having any help from ITT for job placement, my degree is now useless, as no one sees attending ITT as a real education because of all the fraudulent actions that went on. I am now stuck with $30,000 in student loans and no prospect of a career in my field. This is not fair for me, nor all the other students in the same situation."

I just want to end by urging the Department to discharge the debt of these students who worked so hard to better their lives through education, only to be conned by schools intent on getting rich off of taxpayer-backed loans. These students will never get their time back, but the Department can at least let them start over. Thank you for your time.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. William Dunbar.

MR. DUNBAR: I'm Dr. William Dunbar. I'm president of the Midwest College of Oriental Medicine. We are a multi-state approved accredited program offering a Master's Degree in Oriental Medicine. We are a for-profit college.

There are a few points I would like the Department to consider when revisiting the Gainful Employment rules as it applies to colleges of acupuncture and Chinese medicine, a very narrow concept.

The education of ACM students is substantially different in career choices and education than other goals of other graduates, programs and students of other student accredited programs. The theme for me today is: Hold me accountable for what I can control; don't hold me accountable for what I can't control. And one of the things about ACM students is that many of them, not like other industries, are not choosing to be employed, or not choosing to be employed full-time. In fact, one of our graduates whose husband is a cardiologist chose to receive financial aid and is practicing at a local tennis club part-time, may not even be charging people.

I have a graduate who recently moved to Florida whose husband is a prominent internist. She decided to go to school, obtain her master's degree, pass the national boards, obtain licensure, with the expectation that she would have a number of children before practicing after they were 18.

I have a senior retired Korean graduate who chose to do the education for the sole purpose of treating patients in his community church in the basement for free.

Another graduate, a student, who, during the application process, indicated that the sole purpose of her education was the life-long treatment of her autistic child. She felt that the acupuncture helped the autism but couldn't afford the life-long treatment so she felt it would be better to receive the education and never intended on practicing.

Some graduates choose to volunteer at low-cost clinics. There's a practice called Community Acupuncture where there's a sliding scale between $5 and $20 a treatment, and, subsequently, our graduates adjust their lifestyle and adjust their choosing to earn less money.

I mentioned this to a friend and he said, Well, how can that be? How can you be held responsible for your graduates' choices?" And I can't.

Our graduates are 80 percent women. The average student is between 38 and 42 years old. Many women students wait until having children and they were independent before returning to acupuncture in Chinese medicine. Some graduates choose to rely on the support of their spouses and to operate how-they-like practices.

So the idea that there's immediate employment is nonexistent. We do have graduates in hospitals and medical centers across Illinois and Wisconsin, but most graduates choose independent practice. They choose to be entrepreneurs, and, as you know, it takes a number of years before we can break even.

My second point is that there are 60 colleges, approximately, teaching Chinese medicine and acupuncture in America. 50 percent are for-profit.

50 percent are not-for-profit. We all teach, basically, the same curriculum, we have similarly qualified faculty, we have very similar fixed costs for operations, yet 50 percent of the schools are not required to comply with these regulations. The not-for-profits are totally not evaluated for any of these criteria, which we think is very unfair. We need an equal opportunity for protection under the regulations, both for not-for-profit and for-profit.

Again, getting back to: Hold each college accountable for the measurements. Are the colleges charging more-than-available financial aid? It's real simple. We don't. We operate very much like a not-for-profit. We establish a budget, determine what number of students to make the budget, and that's what we charge in tuition. So if a college is charging less than the financial aid available, publish it. Come out there and say, We're taking 40 percent of your available financial aid. We're taking 110 percent of your financial aid. That gives a consumer an indication of what it costs and how responsible the college is.

I believe in consumer protection 100 percent, and I believe the Department needs to do more in terms of disclosures, other than the Gainful Employment little web page that may be hidden on the websites. We need a Carfax-like disclosure. We need multiple factors that are presented to prospective students at the time of their application or the time of their tour, the time of the interview.

Let's talk about faculty qualifications. Let's talk about the fact that I have 87 percent of my last four years' graduates in practice. They're in practice because we enabled them to pass the Boards. If you can't pass -- first of all, we have an 85 percent completion rate. If you can't pass the Boards, you can't get a license, which means you can't choose not to work full-time. So licensure in professions is important. Passing the boards and completion rate is important. These should be disclosed --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. MANNING: You have 20 seconds.

MR. DUNBAR: Finally, there is a big difference between -- there is a gray area between not-for-profit and for-profit, and I suggest the Department consider eleemosynary for-profits. These are for-profits that don't issue dividends or issue very little dividends. These are colleges that the primary stockholders, myself and my partner, are stockholders. We are both full-time employees, and we are making wages commensurate with not-for-profit positions in our same regard.

If we choose to reinvest in the college in non-revenue-generating sources like library, student services, free tutoring, that should be recognized as a separate entity, and an eleemosynary for-profit should be a separate category and it should have less regulations attached to it, and it can be shown on audits. It could be part of the --

MR. MARTIN: That's all, sir.

MR. DUNBAR: Thank you for your time.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Anthony Abbate.

MR. ABBATE: Hello. Thank you for this time. I appreciate it. I'm Anthony Abbate. I am CEO of Southwest Acupuncture college. We have campuses in New Mexico and a campus in Colorado. We've been in business for 35 years, and I'd like to suggest that if the Department of Education continues to use debt-to-earning ratios, that the earning measurements point should be career-specific. As they've done with MDs, and DDS, they've made the measurement point be between six and nine years after graduation, and this is reasonable because those professions need time to get established and build a practice.

MDs also especially have to do internship.

The acupuncture and Oriental medicine community is very similar. 75 percent of all of our graduates choose to go into private practice, and most of them don't get licensed before six months to a year. Some states like New Mexico only offer a board exam once or twice a year. So, often, students have to wait for that to come around, and then by the time they're ready to set up their practice, they have a big expense doing that, and they'll have a big expense for furniture and equipment, rent, and expanding that over the next couple of years as they do build clientele.

Also, if the Department chooses to continue with debt-to-earnings ratios -- sorry -- they should also consider doing it for all schools, not just for-profits, but also the nonprofits. In our profession, there's very little difference in the programs and the cost of the programs and the outcomes and what the graduates end up making. It's all very similar. And doing it -- applying it only to for-profits doesn't really do anything, because there's another 30 for-profits that are going to continue charging the same amount because they're not being held accountable, and, you know, the outcomes will be the same.

The graduates will still be making what they're making now, so it really doesn't serve a purpose. And, actually, the only thing that it really does is that it's going to eliminate thousands of jobs, and it's going to bring less taxes to the states and the federal government, because for-profits are the only ones that pay taxes, and it's also going to hurt many, many patients.

Between 2013 and 2016, my school treated 53,000 patients for low cost or no cost, and all of the free treatments that we gave during that period, if you use the average of what's charged for an acupuncture treatment today, comes to a total of two thousand nine -- I mean, $2,975,000. And that's just one school. And so if a lot of schools don't meet the default -- they don't meet those rates, the GE rates, then they will be put out of business, and the same thing is going to happen in those towns as well. Also, I just want to say that the schools have been in business for over 30 years, and they've been receiving financial aid.

They all have both for-profits and the nonprofits. They all have very low default rates. The rates are mostly in the one digit, and it's especially important to understand that we are very small schools. We have hundreds of students, not thousands. So if you have 100 students and you have a 3-percent default rate, that's three students compared to a school that has thousands. If you have a 3-percent default rate at 1,000 students, it's 30 students. So our defaults are very, very low, and we think that, you know, that makes a big difference.

We think that there could be an alternative method of complying with the regulations and staying with financial aid.

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. ABBATE: Okay. I'll leave it at that. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Ronald Holt.

MR. HOLT: Hello, my name is Ron Holt. I'm an attorney in Kansas City, Missouri with a law firm called Douthit Frets. My firm and I represent colleges around the nation, mostly for-profits, but also some nonprofits, and I thank the Department for this opportunity to speak.

Albert Einstein once famously remarked, "It's not that I'm more brilliant than other people, it's just that I spend more time with problems." And I think the Gainful Employment regulation and the Borrower Defense regulation are problems, and I applaud the Department for taking this time to examine them.

They're not problems because of their objectives. We all want to prevent fraud and we all want to screen out under-performing programs. They're problems because of their mechanics and the means that were chosen.

So I want to suggest that the Department in this rulemaking for Gainful Employment consider whether or not the statute really requires a debt-to-earnings ratio. Consider, secondly, whether or not it's even a viable way to determine whether a program leads to Gainful Employment. And, third, as many speakers have suggested, consider whether there are viable and more appropriate alternative means to measure quality.

Now, looking at the Statute, since its adoption in 1965, it includes this requirement for all programs at for-profits and for non-degree programs at nonprofits and publics. Those programs have to prepare a student for Gainful Employment in a recognized occupation.

For 45 years before the Obama administration, those words meant, simply, that the program had to equip a student with the knowledge and the skills to gain employment in a recognized occupation. You couldn't get Title IV money for an advocational program. Like, I want to learn Northern Italian cooking so I can impress my friends and serve them a nice dinner. I want to improve my gardening skills or bird watching. No, you can't get Title IV dollars for that, and that's how it was understood. And I submit to you that if program qualifications need to be examined, the Department can do that separately. But that's not what those words in the Statute mean.

Now, if there's any improvement that could be made to what had been done for 45 years, it might be to require that a program have a definite length through its SIC code to a SOC code that's on the O*NET website, show that there's a direct correlation between an academic program and a recognized occupation. Secondly, we might even require that the program be relevant by showing that the unemployment rate in that program in a particular region is not substantially higher than the national unemployment rate or the regional unemployment rate, in general, for everything. And, third, we could require too that the programs not only meet, but exceed, any accrediting requirements on placement and licensure, and if, in fact the accrediting body doesn't have those because it's a regional accrediting body, the Department could set its own reasonable level. That would be a way to ensure that a program prepares a student for gainful employment in a recognized occupation.

But I submit to you that debt-to-earnings is not. It's not viable. And you've heard people speak here today throughout the course of the day about the many problems. First, the law prohibits the Department from making it fair. You can't include all graduates in the rate. You can't collect information on non-Title IV graduates right now. How can you evaluate the quality of a program comparing average earnings to average debt when you're not including the debt and the earnings of all the graduates? You're screening out the non-Title IV graduates. And, in fact, most of those people would have lower debt which would result in a lower gainful employment or debt-to-earnings ratio, so it's not fair, and it can't be fair unless Congress changes the law, and until the law changes, there shouldn't be a debt-to-earnings rate.

Secondly, as other speakers have said, the way Congress wrote this law, we're only looking at some of the academic programs, not all. Degree programs at nonprofit and public institutions aren't measured under any kind of a Gainful Employment requirement. Well, if it makes sense to measure programs based on a debt-to-earnings metric, we should do it for everybody. All students would deserve that protection if it's really valid.

viability side, you've got programs and problems that have been alluded to already. When do you measure earnings? Certain careers like the medical careers, acupuncture and massage careers, two of the prior speakers who are my clients as well have pointed out the fact that it takes a long time to develop a client base. So if you were to retain a debt-to-earnings rate, you would have different multiple measurement periods to administer. Added to that, you have different multiple life choices that people make. You've heard about that. Some people only plan to work part-time. Some people plan to not work at all. Some people plan to take off when they have a child and wait until their children reach school age or even beyond that. Some people have elderly parents. Some people have ill family members and friends. They take off for various reasons. The rule that we have right now doesn't account for those variables if those people are out of the workforce in the earnings year because of personal life situations or choices. And imagine how difficult it would be to write a rule and administer it with all the labor hours it would take to manage all those --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. HOLT: -- circumstances. It's not viable.

Finally, on the Borrower Defense, I just want to say that we need a clear process. It needs to be fair. Schools need to have an opportunity to participate, and I think you need to focus just on Borrower Defense, not on separate topics that require separate expertise. For example, financial responsibility, letters of credit and arbitration, those are matters that require their own separate examination.

Thank you for the time.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Mark S. McKenzie.

MR. McKENZIE: Thank you. I also want to just take a moment. Ryan, thank you for your service. Greatly appreciate it.

My name is Mark McKenzie. I'm the Executive Director of the Accreditation Commission for Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine, so, apparently, we have a large representative group here today. ACAOM is a USDE recognized, specialized accreditor for graduate degree programs in acupuncture and in Oriental medicine. We are both an institutional and a programatic accrediting agency. We currently accredit 56 institutions, nationally, representing approximately 8,000 students enrolled in 95 graduate programs located in 22 states. The average total enrollment per school, as was alluded to earlier, is 143. Schools range from about 20 students to a maximum of around 600, so these are small institutions. 26 of the 56 schools are private -- are considered private proprietary institutions, or for-profit, that are offering graduate programs, many of which will be negatively impacted without reasonable revisions to the GE regulations. Three of these institutions actually happen to be located in Texas, and three of the institutions -- or at least two of them are providing testimony before you today.

So, first, I want to emphasize that ACAOM fully supports the concept of Gainful Employment and, more fully, the protection of student loan borrowers from any institution that employs misleading, deceitful, or predatory admissions, financial aid, or other practices that negatively impact students.

Second, ACAOM supports the Department's decision to delay implementation of the regulations pending an appropriate review or revision process to eliminate the unintended consequences that the current regulations will have on the institutions that ACAOM accredits. You've heard some of the issues already. My comments are based on the perspective from the accreditor and this limited narrow field of acupuncture

The fact is all of our programs are graduate health care programs in a developing field. As a developing field, there are few full-time salaried positions, and the majority of graduates who choose this profession by default typically become small business owners. These regulations simply do not accommodate the differences between established and mature professions with salaried positions in large organizations and developing professions where you have to create your own path and your own business. Any of you that have started your own business know that it takes a while before you're able to bring home the paycheck.

There are a couple of other reasons these regulations need refinement. The GE regulations purely are discriminatory between private proprietary, or for-profit institutions, and nonprofit institutions based purely on their organizational structure, and have assumption of things that -- or perceptions of things that have happened in the past, rather than an actual practice or institutional outcomes. As an accrediting agency, we monitor these outcomes, including default rates, graduation rates, national Board scores, and I can tell you, there is no statistical, significant difference between the schools that we accredit when it comes to their organizational status. Whether they're for-profit or nonprofit, it makes no difference. For example, loan default rates. The national average right now for grad schools for nonprofit institutions is 6.5 percent. It's 14 percent for for-profit institutions, nationally. Within ACAOM schools, those numbers are 4.16 percent for nonprofit and 4.43 percent for the for-profit institutions. So, basically, there is no difference in those institutions.

ACAOM graduate programs lead the licensure, currently, in 46 states and the District of Columbia. And the program length, which is the primary determinant of an overall program cost is, in large part, determined by state regulation and accreditation standards. Therefore, schools have little control over the income thresholds encountered by their graduates and the known challenges with utilization of the Social Security income data. They have very little control over that, and so it's very challenging to hold schools responsible for those issues.

As far as the Borrower Defense to Repayment regulations, in our evaluation of that, there are two examples of areas that we believe need revision to include -- which include the low burden of proof required to initiate claims of misrepresentation --

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. McKENZIE: -- and then due process issues inherent in THE regulations regarding letter of credit requirements. So I thank you for your time. Appreciate the opportunity.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. We're going to take approximately a 15-minute break and we'll reconvene at 2:30. Oh, I should say we do have available time slots for the afternoon if any of you wish to sign up for those. Okay. On second thought here, we do have somebody here. Ms. Pamela Gant-Lee here?

MS. GANTT-LEE: Yes, I'm here.

MR. MARTIN: Why don't we have you come speak now, and then we have one other person after that. That's Pamela Grant-Lee, G-r-a-n-t L-e-e, is that correct?

MS. GANTT-LEE: It's G-a-n-t-t.

MR. MARTIN: Oh, I'm sorry. It's Gantt. Pamela Gantt, G-a-n-t-t hyphen L-e-e. I'm sorry.

MS. GANTT-LEE: Good afternoon, everyone.

MR. MANNING: Good afternoon.

MS. GANTT-LEE: The right to education. Education is a fundamental human right and essential for the exercise of all human rights. It promotes individual freedom and empowerment and yields important developmental benefits, yet millions of adults remain deprived of educational opportunities made as a -- made as result of poverty. My name is Pamela Gantt-Lee, and I am a teacher at DISD. I have 20-plus years of experience. I am also an adjunct professor at DCCD, and I've been there for two years, and my field is education.

I am here on the behalf of my profession and union, which is a medical federation of teachers who defend, and Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense rules which are based on two simple ideas. One, the education that describes itself as career training actually improves students' livelihoods. Two, that colleges that use the promise of higher education to trick students into debt should be punished, and those students made whole. Basically, what I'm talking about is some of the technical schools that you might know of, Devry, ITT, and I could throw all of them in the same bag together. It is well understood that a high school diploma is no longer sufficient to enter the middle class in this country.

People who know college is important, such as myself, but have traditionally had a hard time accessing higher education, including veterans, so there's no reason -- there's a reason for me being dressed patriotic today -- had a hard time accessing higher education, including veterans, parents, people of color, have been sold a bill of goods by schools that care more about their bottom line than adult education.

These are students like young men named Michael Odono (phonetic). So I'm standing in the gap for some of these names that I'm going to name today. Michael had a dream of success in career technology. Corinthian College promised Michael that they would provide him with a high-quality education in computer information science, with hands-on experience using the latest technology, along with lifetime career placement services. Instead, Michael found outdated software, obsolete hardware, and was left with $30,000 in debt. With a subpar degree that employees discarded as meaningless, Michael's college dream became a nightmare.

Another one is Mia McCarthy (phonetic). Mia is a former ITT Tech student who says that when ITT Tech recruited her, she was highly vulnerable. She is a first-generation American whose family was forced into a marriage with an abusive man when she was 15 years of age. She became pregnant while in high school and was kicked out of her family house, but ITT Tech was a high school that recruited her and promised her easy class schedules and easy time finding a job at ITT Tech.

As Mia explains -- and I'm standing in the gap of Mia -- "What ITT offered sounded amazing. I went in and talked to an advisor, signed a couple of documents that weren't explained to me, and began taking classes. I learned absolutely nothing the entire time I was at the school." While Mia didn't learn anything at the school, she did leave something tangible, more than $20,000 in student loans. She didn't know what she had signed up for.

The community college I worked for would never treat students like that. I'm part of the DCCD. That's because we have an oversight structure that promise students learning, not shareholding profits. Cedar Valley College has over two dozen programs affected by the Gainful Employment rule like all other schools that accept federal student aid.

Would be impacted by the Borrower Defense rule. Some claims that one sector of higher education is being targeted by these rules are simply false.

As stewards of billions of taxpayer dollars meant to support the public good through higher education, the Federal Department of Education should stand with students against predatory institutions.

MR. MARTIN: Time.

MR. MANNING: 20 seconds.

MS. GANTT-LEE: The Gainful Employment and Borrower Defense rules should be allowed to move forward to provide students the information they need and the debt relief that they deserve.

And I thank you for this time to speak.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MS. GANTT-LEE: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Is Ashley here now? I didn't get the last name.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: I'll go see if she's outside.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. Because if she is, we can proceed with her now.

I would also ask -- rather inform everybody that we do have additional time slots, so if you want to sign up to speak after we are -- have concluded with the next speaker, you may do so. Otherwise, I will begin singing now. No -- I don't want to do it but I feel I have to. Yes?

MS. HERRINGTON: I believe you called me. Ashley Herrington. Do you want me to go now?

MR. MARTIN: Yes, I'm sorry, Ms. Herrington. Yes, well, she was originally scheduled for 2:45, but if you can go now, that's great.

MS. HERRINGTON: Thank you for this opportunity. I am with Center for Responsible Lending, Ashley Herrington, and we just wanted to share a few borrower stories to emphasize the need for strong regulations -- strong regulations and the need to keep the current regulations.

So this is a story from a female 31-year-old African-American. "I think predatory lending has something to do with it. Ignorance of the law is not an excuse for you to break the law. I think that same concept applies here, but I do feel as though the lack of information -- not lack of information but informing the participant and really not analyzing to see if that participant has a good conceptualization of the actual repercussions of these large amounts of sums that we're getting. To me, it seems like education is this new form of slavery, because everybody's trying to get to that next level, but in the midst of us getting to that next level, we are being bound with all these large sums of debt.

This is an African-American male, a Devry student. "You were saying they showed you numbers? Yeah, per degree you go towards. Since I was going for network communications manager, you are going to be starting off with this bachelor degree at 64,000 starting off, and so each program had a number associated with it. Each number had that. Each degree from bachelor's to associate, so even with network communication management, they would have network associates and so forth, and they would show you the difference to try to entice you for the bachelor's. Was there any warning that these were averages? No. None was given."

We had another -- this is -- we had another female, 28, Hispanic, who went to Everest. "This is crazy. The program was an eight-month program, and I started noticing about the second or third teacher had quit, and we kept getting new teachers every month. We had -- I had about five different teachers in the eight-month program there, and everybody had their own teaching style. Everybody wanted to change it up and, like, the students were getting frustrated and mad at the teachers, because we already were used to learning it one way, and then a new teacher would come in and change, and it was really frustrating."

Sonja (phonetic), a Devry student, female, 40, Hispanic. "I don't have the credit, and right now, I wish I could just go buy a house and I can't, because that's in there. I can't even buy a new car because that's in there, so I feel that I'm tied up, that I'm being held back from moving forward in life because I have student loans that I really can't afford to pay."

And these are all students who were a part of the focus group that we did in Florida. Each of them attended a for-profit school and had some -- the general sense was that for-profits were preying on these students and giving them unsustainable amounts of debt for an education that was pretty much worthless.

So we just encouraged the Department to enact strong regulations or just to keep the regulations that you already have and regulate these for-profits and stop them from preying on our communities. Thanks.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. Do we have anybody else who would like to have an additional slot? Yes, ma'am.

MS. SARGE: Do you want me to go now or wait for the break?

MR. MARTIN: You may go now. Just state your name again when you get to the podium, please. And, again, it will be an additional five-minute slot.

MS. SARGE: Again, my name is Sandy Sarge, and I am a consultant for higher education. I had two choices today when I was deciding which topic to discuss with you. I'm very passionate about 90/10 because, for me, I'm just a math geek, and 90/10 is about the math, so I wanted to emphasize a fact-based numeric example for you, because I think that that's the best way to get to the root causes of things. My other speech was a little bit more impassioned.

In the final GE rule that we received on October 31, 2014, the Department stated in their summary that it is, quote, "Concerned that a number of GE programs, 2, provide training for an occupation for which low wages do not justify the program costs." So it came up with a debt-to-earnings calculation, and I would say arbitrarily determined that if this ratio is greater than 12 percent, a program must not be worthy or of high quality. That's what brings me back into the 90/10 information that I talked about earlier. It's a major driver for for-profit schools, only for-profit schools, because it, in essence, sets an arbitrary floor on how low tuition can go. Otherwise, they break the rule.

Many for-profit schools are legally classified as for-profits. These schools are often good, ethical entities who got into the business of providing education and training because of a sincere desire to better their communities. In fact, I know many that I would say don't even or didn't even realize that they would be considered different simply because they paid their taxes. When you're a small school and you started off in your garage or in a one-room office to provide occupational therapy, oftentimes, you just put out your sign, said, Come to school, I'll teach you how to do this, and you paid your taxes at the end of the year because somebody paid you for that service you gave them. It isn't until several years later, sometimes 10 or 15 years of operating as a non-Title IV school, that they go through the process of being Title IV eligible or getting eligible, but they find out that they are somehow now different than their counterparts.

If we're truly interested in bringing down the cost of tuition and lowering student debt, we need to do away with these regulations that force higher prices on students. Students who don't take the debt out in the first place because it can be covered by Pell, the cost of the school could be covered by Pell, or have very little debt because we've brought the tuitional rates down, we wouldn't have to worry about getting them gainfully employed. They could utilize the repayment plans that work for them, and if all else were equal, they shouldn't default. It would be a win-win for everybody.

Don't get me wrong. I am all for weeding out unscrupulous players in the industry. I want those who cheat the system to be punished, but when these rules cause a school like Harvard to suspend admissions into its graduate program in Theater, you've got to wonder if we're really addressing what's best for students. This was a top-rated program that would arguably give students an advantage on their resume, regardless of the high ticket price. All GE did in this case was take away student choice. So as the saying goes, let's not throw out the baby with the bath water. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. Currently -- yes?

MR. SHIREMAN: I'd be interested in taking another minute, if you wouldn't mind.

MR. MARTIN: Hold on just a second.

MR. MANNING: After the break?

MR. SHIREMAN: Sure. Either way.

MR. MARTIN: Okay.

MR. SHIREMAN: Either way is fine.

MR. MARTIN: All right. Here's the situation you're in. You'd be the last speaker. We don't have anybody else.

AUDIENCE MEMBER: May I go one more? I have some more stories.

MR. MARTIN: Okay. Fine. Why don't we just take a -- I'm taking a break, finally. No one can dissuade me from this. We're taking a break, unless Mr. Manning says I'm not taking a break. But let's take a 10-minute break and then come back at approximately 2:40, and we'll convene again.

MR. MARTIN: We're going to reconvene. As I pointed out earlier before the break, we do not have any more scheduled speakers, but we have -- I think we have two people that want to -- would like to speak again, right, if I'm not mistaken. So we will entertain that. And, at that point, according to the schedule, we will have no further speakers. However, the event is scheduled to continue until 4:00 so we will be here until that time, regardless of whether anybody is speaking or not. Okay. So, Bob, ready to speak again? So we'll begin with Mr. Bob Shireman.

MR. MANNING: Welcome back.

MR. SHIREMAN: Thank you very much. I just wanted to -- the topic of this rulemaking is not the 90/10 rule, and much of it is said in statute, so there's not a lot that the Department can do in terms of regulations, but I did want to respond to the statements that have been made about 90/10.

The concept of 90/10 has a very long history, really, from the very first problems that emerged from the GI Bill after World War II where schools were being created where, basically, they found out the amount of aid that was available, priced their programs based on that aid, and recruited soldiers by saying, Hey, this is totally covered, come here, do this program, you'll get a great job.

In 1976, the Federal Trade Commission found that similar kinds of things were happening in the student financial aid program that the Department of -- that was pretty new then at the U.S. Department of Education, and here's what they had to say in the 1976 report from the Ford Administration: "Often, the mere mention of the federal government to potential students implies and is understood as government inspection and approval of course content and job placement capabilities." A salesman testified to the FTC at the time, "I could go down in the ghetto and stand on the corner and enroll all kinds of people if it is free. He doesn't care if the course is airlines, insurance adjusting, hotel management or what, if it's free, going to be paid by the government, and you can get him a job, he would have to be crazy not to do this. This is a salesman's dream."

Ted Bell, who later became President Reagan's Education Secretary said, "I personally question the soundness of an institution whose existence is totally derived from signing up students who qualified for federal aid." He actually adopted a rule that said that no more than 60 percent of the enrolled students could use federal loans, and that rule kind of mysteriously disappeared later. So that is the -- that's where 90/10 comes from, that at least 10 percent of the students at a school need to be affirming the private -- the value of the program at the price that is being offered. It's to prevent schools from pricing their education, pricing tuition based on the availability of federal aid. They should demonstrate a market price, and that is what the federal government is willing to pay.

Now, if schools follow the intent and the wording of 90/10, it works that way. What most of the for-profit schools have done is they have changed their interpretation, and it works with the wording. The wording is "revenue" and not "students." So they say, Well, 10 percent of the revenue has to be outside of federal aid, so they hop up the tuition and -- by the 11 percent that was mentioned by the earlier speaker -- and that becomes the 10 percent of non-federal revenue.

But it is a complete perversion of the intent of the rule and not really the honest way to comply with 90/10. 90/10 is about 10 percent of the students being not on federal aid as a private sector indicator of value. Thank you.

MR. MANNING: Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Thank you. And we have one additional speaker. Please state your name again when you come to the podium.

MS. BARKLEY: Sure. Hi. I'm Wendy Barkley-Denney, with the Center For Responsible Lending. So we have a few more focus group stories that we wanted to share and -- I apologize, this is directly from our focus group, so there's a moderator and someone talking back to the moderators. This is somewhat of a dramatic reading to close the day out.

So first of all, I'll be the moderator. "Come back to the question, how the school approached you, and it could be a positive story." Hanna. The names have been changed because this is a study. We don't want to reveal their anonymity. "You wanted to say something." Hanna -- and the student attended Florida technical college. "I mean, if I'm being very honest, it's the same thing. You hear the commercial, Be a medical biller. I didn't even know what a medical biller coder was when I walked in, literally," and there was laughter in the room.

The moderator says, "It was not your life's passion?" "No, not my passion to be an encoder, no, but when I walked in, it was like, It's 11 months, I can do it, get a job making decent money, great, and the lady sold me with her jazz hands." Moderator asks, "What did she sell you?" "The dream." "And what was the dream she sold you?" That you're going to go and you're going to have this amazing job, and you're going to graduate, and all of your professors are going to give you all these tools to have this job and to have this future. Thankfully, I am not going to wait for anyone else to do it for me. I'm going to do it for me, but I can see how people get sucked into that, and it's not what they tell you it's going to be, but for me, I thought it was going to be an easy, quick little 11 months and get a good job, but it's not an easy job. It's so hard."

This is a second -- we did three focus groups, this is not necessarily the same focus group. The moderator asks, "And I don't want the same answer. I want everyone's actual answer. Did the for-profit school help you move up in the world? And you, you're shaking your head." This is Andy. He went to Fordis. "No, they're basically like high-pressure salesmen.

They sell you this big story, this dream, and when you go to the school and you're part of the program because you've already paid. In my situation, they'd told me I'd gotten a scholarship for a certain amount. I had went for half the time, and then they told me I didn't qualify for that scholarship anymore, and I had to come up with the rest of the money to finish my program." "So you went in with under one understanding, you" -- "Yes, halfway through. It was kind of like bait and switch. I wouldn't have gone if I had known it was going to cost me $15,000. Even if I had -- everything had to be paid. And then I was going there, and you start to learn there's no way no one would not pass the class. They basically said, We're going to have a test tomorrow. Take out a pencil. This is what's going to be on your test. Just make sure you memorize what I'm telling, and you word-for-word, it was your test." And then the moderator asked, "So it moved from how they treated you as a student into what happened to you in the classroom?" And Andy answered, "Yeah, and then you look at these things and they tell you, You're going to make this amount of money. You don't make anywhere near the amount of money they tell you you're going to be making. We're going to do the job placement. They don't do the job placement. They do not find you a job.

And then you do, like, an externship with these certain doctors that they have ins in with for free, and that's the only way you can graduate from the program."

And there's one more. Let me scroll down. This is Kelly. She went to Everest. The moderator asked, "What's happening to you, Kelly? You're in deferment. Oh, your income shows -- you show no income, so there's no -- how are you going to get out of that? What's the plan?" Kelly. "I actually have been thinking about going back to school to get my bachelor's and, hopefully, I'll be making more than what they told me I would be making as a pharmacy technician, because I know I've got to pay it off eventually. I can't just sit there. I don't want them to one day come say, Oh, we're going to take your -- when she does get a job -- we're going to garnish your wages. I can't do that. I've got a daughter. I've got another child on the way. I can't afford that. So it was scary to me for a little bit." The moderator asks, "So your pregnancy made you think about what I'm going to do, I've got to think long term, so now you're thinking, I'll go back to school, I'll get a BA, a BA in what? What's your plan of action? I know you're thinking about it, but what's your --" Kelly says, "I'm not sure yet, but I know I need to get a higher degree to get a higher rate of pay.

That's what I'm thinking now. An Associate's Degree is not enough money. You might as well work at McDonald's. My cousin works at McDonald's. She gets $10 an hour. I'm like, Are you serious? She lives up north, but still."

"Let me play devil's advocate with you. You went for a two years associate degree or whatever, and it's only set you back. It's like you're doubling down, isn't it? I'm just playing with this idea." That's the moderator. "Yeah, yeah. I'm going to owe -- that's the other thing, I'm going to owe even more money, right, so I don't know. I don't know. But the promise is there still in your mind, right. I'm not trying to depress you. I mean, even at the end of the day, the way I soothe my brain is, Once I do get this bachelor's, I'm going to work on -- I'm going to have a high rate of pay and some way, somehow, they're going to have to work with whatever I'm making to make these little payments, even if it's going to take me the rest of my life to pay it off, because that's how I look at it now. No matter what, it's going to take me the rest of my life to pay this money back."

That's all. Thank you.

MR. MARTIN: Thank you.

Okay. Do we have anybody else who would like to speak again? Okay. Right now, we have no further speakers scheduled for the balance of the afternoon. However, we will be here until 4:00 p.m., which is the scheduled end of the session. So I'll just turn it over to Mr. Manning for some remarks.

MR. MANNING: Well, I want to thank you all for being here today and participating. It's very useful for us to have heard from all of you, and thank you, again, for your participation and please stay engaged.

(Recess from 2:53 p.m. to 3:59 p.m.)

MR. MARTIN: It is now 4:00, and the proceedings are closed. Want to thank you for coming, and we want to thank Southern Methodist University for being our host today.

(Proceedings concluded at 4:00 p.m.)

Douglas N. GAER, Individually and on Behalf of All Others Similarly Situated, Plaintiffs, v.
AMERICAN PUBLIC EDUCATION, INC., et al., Defendants.

Civil Action No. 3:10–CV–81.
Dec. 8, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Investors brought class action against for-profit provider of online post-secondary education and its chief executive officer (CEO) and chief financial officer (CFO), alleging securities fraud and controlling person liability. Defendants moved to dismiss.

Holdings: The District Court, John Preston Bailey, J., held that:

[1] investors failed to allege sufficient facts showing that statements in annual financial report were materially false and misleading;

[2] investors did not adequately allege that statements in press release, conference call, and quarterly report contained material misrepresentations or omissions;

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

JOHN PRESTON BAILEY, District Judge.

I. Introduction

Pending before this Court is the Motion to Dismiss by Defendants American Public Education, Inc., Wallace E. Boston, Jr., and Harry T. Wilkins [Doc. 59], which was filed on March 10, 2011. Following an extended briefing period, the plaintiffs filed their response in opposition [Doc. 61] on April 25, 2011, and defendants filed their reply [Doc. 62] on May 16, 2011. The defendants also filed a Notice of Supplemental Authority in Support of Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 63] on October 7, 2011. Having been fully briefed, the Motion to Dismiss is now ripe for disposition. For the reasons more fully stated below, the Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 59] is GRANTED.

II. Factual and Procedural History

A. The Class

On August 12, 2010, Douglas Gaer ("Gaer") filed this class action against defendants American Public Education, Inc. ("APEI" or "the Company") and certain officers and directors of the Company (collectively, "defendants"), alleging certain violations of the federal securities laws. The plaintiffs in this class action (the "Class Plaintiffs") represent all purchasers of the publicly traded common stock of APEI during the Class Period, which spans from February 22, 2010, to August 5, 2010. On October 12, 2010, putative class member City of Miami Fire Fighters' and Police Officers' Retirement Trust (the "Retirement Trust"), pursuant to § 21D of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and 15 U.S.C. § 78u–4(a), filed a motion seeking appointment as lead plaintiff and approval of its selection of Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP ("RGRD") as lead counsel 769 and Steven F. White PLLC as liaison counsel in this action. No other putative class member filed a motion to be appointed as lead plaintiff; however, on October 29, 2010, Gaer filed an opposition to the Retirement Trust's motion for appointment as lead plaintiff and requested that the Court appoint him as lead plaintiff. Prior to any ruling, the Retirement Trust and Gaer reached an agreement for their joint appointment as lead plaintiff.

On January 25, 2011, the "Class Plaintiffs" filed their Consolidated Amended Complaint for Violation of the Federal Securities Laws [Doc. 56]. Count I alleges violations of Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b–5 against all defendants. Count II alleges violations of Section 20(a) of the Exchange Act against defendants Boston and Wilkins. [1]

B. The Defendants

APEI is a for-profit provider of online post-secondary education that has traditionally focused on serving the military and public service communities. American Public University System ("APUS"), wholly owned by APEI, is comprised of two universities: American Military University ("AMU") and American Public University ("APU"). Compl. at ¶¶ 3, 40. APEI offers degree and certificate programs in various disciplines, including national security, military studies, homeland security, and criminal justice. Id. at ¶ 40. As a for-profit institution of higher education, APEI primarily derives its revenues from student tuition, many of whom are active-duty military members and veterans. Id. at ¶ 3. The majority of these students receive federally-funded student aid.

Prior to the start of the Class Period, APEI's course enrollments, or net course registrations, representing the aggregate number of classes in which students remain enrolled after the date by which they may withdraw from courses without financial penalty, increased a compound annual growth rate ("CAGR") of 48% from 2007 to 2009. Id. at ¶ 41. Over that same time period, APEI's total revenue increased at a CAGR of 47%, from $69.1 million in 2007, to $149.0 million in 2009. Id. Net course registrations increased by 55% in 2009, over 2008, and revenue increased from $107.1 million to $149.0 million, or by 39%, over the same time period, while operating margins likewise increased to 26.8% from 24.0%. Id.

C. The "90–10 Rule"

The vast majority of APEI's net revenue comes from students using Department of Defense ("DOD") and Veterans Affairs ("VA") tuition assistance, which does not count as federal taxpayer money received pursuant to the 90–10 Rule. Id. at ¶ 44. According to the Department of Education 770 ("DOE"), "the 90–10 Rule states, simply, that a for-profit institution of higher education may not receive more than 90% of its revenue from federal Title IV [of the Higher Education Act] grants and loans." Id. at ¶ 6. The 90–10 Rule is not a new concept. It was implemented by Congress in 1998, as an amendment to the previous 85–15 Rule of 1992. Thus, assuming an efficient market, this regulation is well established and known to informed investors.

On June 30, 2008, Congress passed the Post–9/11 Veterans Educational Assistance Act of 2008 ("Post–9/11 GI Bill"), which provides that almost all service members, including reserve troops who served a minimum of ninety (90) days active duty after September 10, 2001, are eligible for educational benefits for up to thirty-six (36) months at an average of $458 per credit hour. Additionally, the Post–9/11 GI Bill created a uniform method to pass on or share the educational benefit with spouses and children. Id. In 2008, Congress also expanded the existing aid available to active duty service members through the DOD tuition assistance program by creating the Military Spouse Career Advancement Accounts ("MyCAA") program for military spouses. In effect, because DOD and VA tuition assistance does not count as federal taxpayer money received pursuant to the 90–10 Rule, recruiting active-duty members of the military would help at-risk for-profit competitors keep the 90–10 Rule at bay.

D. APEI's Traditional Business Model and Its Competitors' Response to the Post–9/11 GI Bill

As a large provider of military-based higher education, APEI traditionally focused on recruiting active-duty military personnel and veterans, whereas many of its for-profit competitors primarily focused on civilians. The spike in growth of for-profit schools, however—which enrollment increased 236% between 1998–99 and 2008–09—led to vast increases in Title IV lending, hitting $4.3 billion in Pell Grants in the 2008–09 academic year, with an additional $20 billion in federal student loans. Id. Thus, plaintiffs allege that leading up to and during the Class Period, APEI's competitors received a large majority of their rapidly expanding revenues from Title IV funds, putting them on the cusp of violating the 90–10 Rule. Id.

Recognizing the opportunity to avoid violating the 90–10 Rule afforded them by targeting active-duty military personnel and veterans—as well as the increased funding made available by the Post–9/11 GI Bill—Class Plaintiffs allege that APEI's for-profit competitors began aggressively pursuing military and veteran students prior to and during the Class Period in an effort to bolster the 10% side of the 90–10 calculus. Id. at ¶ 51. As a result, the Class Plaintiffs assert that the defendants were aware that APEI's market-leading position in the military for-profit education segment was subject to encroaching competition during the Class Period. Id. at ¶ 52. The Class Plaintiffs assert this rising competition for military students undercut APEI's ability to sustain its traditional growth in military course registrations, which would in turn drive down its stock price.

While the rate of growth for APEI's total military educational benefits received decreased every year, the vast majority of its competitors increased, especially during 2009 and 2010, when the increases were frequently by several hundred, or even several thousand percent. Id. at ¶ 57.[2] 771 APEI saw only a 15% increase in DOD benefits received in 2010, compared to 2009, down from a 31 % gain in 2009, and a 53% increase in 2008. Id. Thus, Class Plaintiffs allege the defendants knew this erosion of APEI's military-based enrollment was not merely a future potential risk, but was an actual, present reality. Id.

E. For–Profit Institutions of Higher Education Come Under Increased Government Scrutiny

While APEI allegedly faced increasing competition, the for-profit education industry fell under ever increasing scrutiny on many fronts—from extremely low graduation rates to excessively high student loan default rates. Id. at ¶ 46. On June 10, 2010, Senator Tom Harkin, chair of the United States Senate's Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, announced he would hold a series of hearings to examine federal spending at for-profit colleges. Id. On June 16, 2010, the United States Department of Education ("DOE") announced it was proposing new, tougher regulations on the industry, which were designed to protect college students and taxpayers from abusive or fraudulent practices. On June 24, 2010, the Senate held the first of its hearings entitled "Emerging Risk? An Overview of the Federal Investment in For–Profit Education." Id. at ¶ 48. Then, on July 23, 2010, the DOE proposed a measure to penalize for-profit colleges for graduating students with high debt-to-income ratios. Id.

On August 4, 2010, the United States Government Accountability Office ("GAO") issued a report detailing its undercover operation on the recruiting techniques employed by certain for-profit colleges. Id. at ¶¶ 49, 92. The GAO's report cited many instances of abuse in the sector, finding that many of the companies in the industry employed fraudulent and deceptive practices in their student recruitment by targeting students who used federal financial aid to pay for their schooling. Id. at ¶ 49. The study was presented at a Senate education hearing held on August 4, 2010, as part of an ongoing inquiry into the for-profit education sector. Id.

Also, on August 4, 2010, Senators Dick Durbin, Jim Webb, Tom Harkin, and others, issued a press release containing the contents of letters sent to Defense Secretary Robert Gates and Secretary of Veterans Affairs Eric K. Shinseki seeking answers regarding the federal investment in for-profit colleges in light of reports that for-profit colleges were aggressively targeting military personnel and veterans. Not only did the August 4, 2010, letters and press release reveal that APEI was under scrutiny, they highlighted reports that other for-profit institutions, which included APEI's competitors, had been "aggressively targeting military personnel," APEI's traditional core source of revenues. Id. It was these types of deceptive and aggressive recruiting practices which formed the basis of the Class Plaintiffs' original Complaint.

Following the close of the Class Period, on December 8, 2010, the United States Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee issued a report entitled "Benefitting Whom? For–Profit Education Companies and the Growth of Military Education Benefits." Id. at ¶ 55. The report included a list of for-profit colleges with their respective military education benefits received, which indicated APEI received more military education benefits than any other school. Id.

F. Class Plaintiffs' Allegations

APEI's market-leading position in the military for-profit education segment declined 772 during the Class Period. Id. at ¶¶ 10, 11, 52. The crux of the Class Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint alleges that the defendants knew or deliberately disregarded that, prior to and during the Class Period, APEI's competitors increasingly focused on expanding their military student enrollment. Id.

At the start of the Class Period, however, Class Plaintiffs alleged that despite the problems impacting APEI's enrollment, defendants assured the market that APEI would continue to grow. APEI also provided outlook for the year 2010, which included a 35–38% increase in net course registrations year-over-year and estimated that net course registrations would increase 32–35% for 2011. Id. at ¶ 62. APEI also reassured the market that it stayed informed of any significant military deployments and factored deployments into its guidance. Id. at ¶ 64. Similarly, on May 6, 2010, APEI reiterated its 2010 guidance for revenue growth and net course registrations and increased its net income guidance to between 36% and 39% year-over-year. Id. at ¶ 76.

Three months later, on August 5, 2010, APEI downgraded its revenue and earnings guidance for the third quarter of 2010, and withdrew guidance for full year 2010. Id. at ¶ 93. APEI revealed "adverse changes" in net course registrations of its active-duty military students at AMU as a result of increased deployments and announced plans to increase APEI's focus on the civilian market, rather than the military market. Id. at ¶ 94. In response to this news, the price of APEI stock decreased by 32%. Id. at ¶ 104.

III. Applicable Law

[1] In passing the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act ("PSLRA") in 1995, Congress imposed heightened pleading requirements for private securities fraud actions. Under § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, it is unlawful "[t]o use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security ... any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of such rules and regulations as the [SEC] may prescribe...." 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b). In enacting the PSLRA, Congress essentially responded to evidence of abusive practices committed in private securities litigation and sought to curtail frivolous litigation. See Teachers' Ret. Sys. of Louisiana v. Hunter, 477 F.3d 162, 171–172 (4th Cir.2007).

[2] Pursuant to § 10(b), the SEC has promulgated Rule 10b–5, which forbids employing "any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, ... mak[ing] any untrue statement of a material fact or omit[ting] to state a material fact ... or ... engag[ing] in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person." 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b–5. "Section 10(b) creates a private right of action for purchasers or sellers of securities who have been injured by the statute's violation. See, e.g., Superintendent of Ins. of State of N.Y. v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 404 U.S. 6, 13 n. 9, 92 S.Ct. 165, 30 L.Ed.2d 128 (1971)." Pub. Employees' Ret. Ass'n of Colo. v. Deloitte & Touche LLP, 551 F.3d 305, 311 (4th Cir.2009).

[3] A plaintiff in a Section 10(b) private action must typically prove: " '(1) a material misrepresentation or omission by the defendant; (2) scienter; (3) a connection between the misrepresentation or omission and the purchase or sale of a security; (4) reliance upon the misrepresentation or omission; (5) economic loss; and (6) loss causation' (that is, the economic loss must be proximately caused by the misrepresentation or omission). Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific–Atlanta, Inc., 552 U.S. 148, 128 S.Ct. 761, 169 L.Ed.2d 627 (2008) (emphasis added)." Matrix Capital 773 Mgmt. Fund, LP v. BearingPoint, Inc., 576 F.3d 172, 181 (4th Cir.2009).

IV. Discussion

A. Section 10(b) Claims

1. Material Misrepresentation

In any private action arising under Section 78u–4(b)(1) in which the plaintiff alleges that the defendant—

> (A) made an untrue statement of a material fact; or
> (B) omitted to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances in which they were made, not misleading;

the complaint shall specify each statement alleged to have been misleading, the reason or reasons why the statement is misleading, and, if an allegation regarding the statement or omission is made on information and belief, the complaint shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed. 15 U.S.C. § 78u–4(b)(1).

[4] "Thus, plaintiffs must allege: (1) each misleading statement; (2) the reasons each statement was misleading; and (3) when an allegation regarding such a statement is based on information and belief, 'with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed.' " Teachers', 477 F.3d 162, 173 (emphasis in original). The Teachers' Court explained:

> The PSLRA's "all facts" standard, however, changes the relevant set of facts for alleging misrepresentations and omissions to those alleged in the complaint. Under the PSLRA, therefore, our inquiry becomes whether, if those facts alleged in the complaint are true, relief could be granted on the plaintiffs' claim. Stated another way, we must ascertain whether the complaint states sufficient facts to permit a reasonable person to find that the plaintiff satisfied this element of his claim—that the defendant made a false or misleading statement.
> If the plaintiff fails to allege all facts but does allege sufficient facts to support a reasonable belief in the allegation that the defendant's statement was misleading, the court should deny the Rule 12(b)(6) motion as to this "misrepresentation" element. See, e.g., Novak v. Kasaks, 216 F.3d 300, 313–14 (2d Cir.2000); see also Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd. v. Tellabs, Inc., 437 F.3d 588, 595 (7th Cir.2006) (endorsing Novak's standard); California Pub. Employees' Retirement Sys. v. Chubb Corp., 394 F.3d 126, 146 (3d Cir.2004) (same); Adams v. Kinder–Morgan, Inc., 340 F.3d 1083, 1099 (10th Cir.2003) (same). This construction of § 78u–4(b)(1) logically follows from the inquiry required by Rule 12(b)(6), which tests only the legal sufficiency of the complaint.
> Determining whether the complaint satisfies this standard necessarily entails a case-by-case assessment of the complaint as a whole. We will consider the number and level of detail of the facts; the plausibility and coherence of the facts; whether sources of the facts are disclosed and the apparent reliability of those sources; and any other criteria that inform how well the facts support the plaintiff's allegation that defendant's statements or omissions were misleading. See Adams, 340 F.3d at 1102–03; Chubb Corp., 394 F.3d at 147–55.

The Amended Complaint at issue here adequately specifies the statements—albeit piecemeal—alleged to have been misleading. Indeed, it identifies several publically issued statements released over several months during the Class Period. But after listing each alleged misleading statement, the Amended Complaint simply 774 speculates why the statement was misleading. The facts—or lack thereof—alleged in support of these formulaic reasons fail to support a reasonable belief that the statements were in fact misleading, and therefore, this Court concludes that the Amended Complaint fails to satisfy the PSLRA and Rule 12(b)(6)'s requirement that the Complaint shall state with particularity sufficient facts on which a reasonable belief can be formed. This became clear when the Court undertook a comprehensive, holistic view of all the statements alleged and the facts supporting the allegations about each statement, which are more fully set forth below.

First, on February 22, 2010, American Public hosted a conference call with investors, media representatives and analysts to discuss its fourth quarter and full year 2009 results, as well as its expectations for 2010. Boston and Wilkins participated in the call on behalf of APEI, in their capacities of CEO and CFO, respectively. Plaintiffs allege that during the call, numerous false and misleading statements were made. For example, Boston stated, in part (Compl. ¶ 63):

> Switching to slide number four, last year we continued to see strong interest from both military and civilian students. For the full year of 2009, net course registrations from students using Title IV increased 90%, and net course registrations from active duty military students increased 31 %. We are very pleased by these results. APUS is the largest provider of higher education to active-duty military, with tremendous visibility and strong relationships within the military community. The characteristics and strategies that made us so successful with military students is also beginning to work well in civilian markets. We are finding that information about our quality, affordability and unique academic offerings also resonates well within the civilian communities we serve.

In that same conference call, Boston stated (Compl. ¶ 65):

> We believe we have continued to gain share in every branch of service; even if we're number one, that we're still continuing to gain actual share inside the military, and you can see that even on a very large number that we finished 2008 at, we ended up with a 31 % enrollment growth with the military, which we were very pleased with. So, you know, once we receive the official numbers, we'll make sure that we put them out in a press release so that everybody can see them.

[5] [6] The critical concern in the case at hand is the first of these factors the plaintiffs in a Section 10(b) action must prove regarding each misleading statement, which itself has two components: (a) a false statement or omission of a fact (b) that is material. In Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 108 S.Ct. 978, 99 L.Ed.2d 194 (1988), the Supreme Court set forth the starting point for any analysis of this factor. There, the Court devoted much of its attention to the "materiality requirement" and held that in order "to fulfill the materiality requirement" in the § 10(b) and Rule 10b–5 context "there must be a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the 'total mix' of information made available." Id. at 231–32, 108 S.Ct. 978 (quoting TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway, Inc., 426 U.S. 438, 449, 96 S.Ct. 2126, 48 L.Ed.2d 757 (1976)). Thus, materiality is a "fact specific inquiry," which "depends on the significance the reasonable investor would place on the withheld or misrepresented information." Id. at 240, 108 S.Ct. 978 (footnote omitted) (emphasis in original). With respect to "contingent or speculative information or events," materiality " 'will depend ... *775 upon a balancing of both the indicated probability that the event will occur and the anticipated magnitude of the event in light of the totality of the company activity.' " Id. at 238, 108 S.Ct. 978 (quoting SEC v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 401 F.2d 833, 849 (2d Cir.1968) (en banc), cert. denied sub nom., Coates v. SEC, 394 U.S. 976, 89 S.Ct. 1454, 22 L.Ed.2d 756 (1969)).

[7] [8] In its discussion of the materiality requirement, the Court also emphasized that in order to meet its burden under this first factor "a plaintiff must show that the statements were misleading as to a material fact," Id. (emphasis in original), and that "[t]o be actionable, of course, a statement must also be misleading." Id. at 239 n. 17, 108 S.Ct. 978. Moreover, all averments of fraud are required by Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) to be "stated with particularity." Where fraudulent projections are alleged, the plaintiffs must therefore identify in the Complaint with specificity some reason why the discrepancy between a company's optimistic projections and its subsequently disappointing results is attributable to fraud. Borow v. nVIEW Corp., 829 F.Supp. 828, 833 (E.D.Va.1993), aff'd mem., 27 F.3d 562 (1994). Mere allegations of "fraud by hindsight" will not satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). Borow, 829 F.Supp. at 833. For this reason, "[m]isstatements or omissions regarding actual past or present facts are far more likely to be actionable than statements regarding projections of future performance." Hillson Partners Ltd. Partnership v. Adage, Inc., 42 F.3d 204, 212 (4th Cir.1994) (citing Malone v. Microdyne Corp., 26 F.3d 471, 479 (4th Cir.1994)) (emphasis in original).

[9] To further provide protection, the PLSRA's "safe harbor" was designed to encourage corporate managers to provide forward-looking information to investors without the chilling effect such litigation produces. This "safe harbor" provision applies to forward-looking statements to immunize defendants from liability provided the statement is identified as such and is accompanied by meaningful cautionary language, or is immaterial, or the plaintiff fails to show that the statement was made with actual knowledge of its falsehood. 15 U.S.C. § 78u–5(c)(1). In addition, "[i]n order to be meaningful, defendants' cautionary language ... should be enough to properly warn an investor of significant risks similar to that actually realized so as to put the investor on notice." In re Lab. Corp. of America Holdings Secs. Litig., 2006 WL 1367428 *5 (M.D.N.C.2006).

The plaintiffs point to three specific statements including a February 22, 2010, Press Release, filed with a Form 8–K with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"), which reports APEI's fourth quarter and full year 2009 financial results.

With regards to the February 22 Press Release, the defendants correctly note that the Amended Complaint takes certain excerpts out of context by omitting the very cautionary language which the safe harbor seeks to protect. The relevant text in the release reads as follows (Compl. ¶ 62):

Full Year 2010 and 2011 Outlook:

The following statements are based on current expectations. These statements are forward-looking and actual results may differ materially.

- Net course registrations to increase between 35% and 38% year-over-year
- Revenues to increase between 36% and 39% year-over-year
- Net income to increase between 36% and 37% year-over-year

For fiscal year 2011, the Company currently anticipates net course registrations will increase approximately 32% to 35% year-over-year

*776 This same press release also contains the following cautionary language:

Safe Harbor Statement

Statements made in this press release regarding American Public Education, or its subsidiaries, that are not historical facts are forward-looking statements based on current expectations, assumptions, estimates, and projections about American Public Education and the industry. These forward-looking statements are subject to risks and uncertainties that could cause actual future events or results to differ materially from such statements. Future-looking statements can be identified by words such as "anticipate", "believe", "could", "estimate", "expect", "intend", "may", "should", "will" and "would". These forward-looking statements include, without limitation, statements regarding expected growth. Actual results could differ materially from those expressed or implied by these forward-

The Company undertakes no obligation to update publicly any forward-looking statements for any reason, even if new information becomes available or other events occur in the future.

See Doc. 60, Ex. 2.

Nor can the Class Plaintiffs suggest that APEI failed to disclose or recognize the nature of its competitive landscape. In both its 2009 Annual Report and Form 10–K, APEI specifically addresses its competition:

> Competition
> There are more than 4,000 U.S. colleges and universities serving traditional college age students and adult students. Competition is highly fragmented and varies by geography, program offerings, delivery method, ownership, quality level, and selectivity of admissions. No one institution has a significant share of the total postsecondary market. Within our primary military market, there are more than 1,000 institutions that serve military students and receive tuition assistance funds. Our primary competitors for military students are other institutions offering bachelor's and master's degrees and traditional colleges and universities located near military installations.
> We compete with not-for-profit public and private two-year and four-year colleges as well as other for-profit schools, particularly those that offer online learning programs. Public and private colleges and universities, as well as other for-profit schools, offer programs similar to those we offer. Public institutions receive substantial government subsidies, and public and private institutions have access to government and foundation grants, tax-deductible contributions and other financial resources generally not available to for-profit schools. In addition, some of our competitors, including both traditional colleges and universities and other for-profit schools, have substantially greater name recognition and financial and other resources than we have, which may enable them to compete more effectively for potential students. We also expect to face increased competition as a result of new entrants to the online education market, including established colleges and universities that had not previously offered online education programs.
> The primary competitive factors for institutions targeting working adult students include: specific degree program offerings; affordability, including tuition and fees and rates of increase; convenience and flexibility, including *777 availability of online courses; reputation and academic quality; and marketing effectiveness.

See Doc. 60, Ex. 3 at pp. 10–11.

Furthermore, the Form 10–K states that:

> Strong competition in the postsecondary education market, especially in the online education market, could decrease our market share and increase our cost of acquiring students.

Following this statement, APEI repeats word-for-word the above-quoted language from Exhibit 3 at pp. 10–11.

In their Amended Complaint, the Class Plaintiffs specify a host of statements which they identify as misleading. Each will be listed below, followed by a brief recitation as to this Court's findings regarding the sufficiency of the alleged misrepresentation and its materiality. In so doing, this Court has reviewed each statement in the Complaint by applying the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals' Teachers' analysis; that is, to identify "(1) each misleading statement; (2) the reasons each statement was misleading; and (3) when an allegation regarding such a statement is based on information and belief, 'with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed.' " Teachers', 477 F.3d 162, 173 (emphasis in original).

As a preface, this Court notes the Amended Complaint clearly identifies each statement believed to be misleading and states reasons why they believe the same to be misleading; however, this Court finds that the Complaint lacks factual support for their proposition that the statements were misleading.

Boston: I—we really haven't embedded any guidance as far as additional deployments. I mean we—you know, we gave you our first quarter guidance, and there was a—an offensive launched in Afghanistan that, you know, I guess theoretically since we know some of the numbers for the first quarter, at least January, you know, and as well as we had soldiers who asked for deferrals because they were deployed to Haiti on rescue missions, but that's kind of typical, and we have already taken that into account. We're not seeing any signs of additional significant deployments anywhere throughout the remainder of the year but, you know, we do stay on top of that and build that into our forecast.

Wilkins: And of course if we did have any significant withdrawals that would benefit us, and that's not in the forecast either.

[10] This Court finds no misleading statements contained in the above. APEI disclosed certain deployments to Afghanistan and requests for deferrals for those on rescue missions in Haiti, which it had already accounted for in its guidance. APEI candidly stated that it did not see any signs of additional significant deployments, but noted that it closely monitors such activity. Taken alone, the above statements do not appear misleading, but this Court will continue to view all the statements together to develop a holistic view of the alleged misrepresentations regarding the change in competitive landscape.

In its February 22, 2010, annual financial report Form 10–K, APEI disclosed (Compl. ¶ 69):

From 2007 to 2009, our total revenue increased from $69.1 million to $149.0 million, which represents a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 47%. Our net course registrations increased 55% and 41% in 2008 and 2009, respectively, over the prior periods. We believe our growth is attributable to: (i) high student satisfaction and referral 778 rates; (ii) regional accreditation in May 2006; (iii) increasing acceptance of distance learning within our targeted markets; and (iv) achieving certification to participate in federal student aid programs under Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 beginning with classes starting in November 2006. As our revenue base grows, we expect our growth rate percentages to continue to decline. However, we expect actual dollar revenue growth to increase. Net income improved to $23.9 million in 2009 from net income of $8.8 million in 2007.

Approximately 75% of our students serve in the United States military on active duty, in the reserves, or in the National Guard or are veterans. Many of our other students have careers in public service, such as federal, national and local law enforcement personnel or other first responders. Our programs are generally designed to help these and other students advance in their current professions or prepare for their next career. Our online method of instruction is well-suited to our students, many of whom serve in positions requiring extended and irregular schedules, are on-call for rapid response missions, participate in extended deployments and exercises, travel or relocate frequently and have limited financial resources. Our satisfied students have been a significant source of referrals for us, which we believe has led to lower marketing costs among certain of our student populations. Over 50% of our new students in 2009 who responded to our surveys indicated that they inquired about enrolling in either AMU or APU as the result of a personal referral.

The Class Plaintiffs assert the above statements referenced in ¶¶ 62–69 were each materially false and misleading when made as they misrepresented and/or omitted adverse facts which then existed and disclosure of which was necessary to make the statements not false and/or misleading. The true facts, plaintiffs allege, which were allegedly known then to or recklessly disregarded by each of the defendants were:

1. The Company's status as the "largest provider of higher education to active-duty military" was materially threatened and being undermined by the explosive surge in competition from other for-profit companies in the military and veteran student population.

2. It was misleading to highlight the Company's purported "tremendous visibility" with its military students because it further hid and omitted the critical fact that the competitive environment in which American Public operates had dynamically shifted as the largest for-profit companies in the country aggressively sought to encroach on the Company's market share in an effort to further insulate themselves from running afoul of the 90–10 Rule.

3. As a result of the foregoing, the Company's market share gains, to the extent they existed, were slowing or poised to slow dramatically.

4. By highlighting the reasons behind the Company's growth, the Company's 2009 Form 10–K was materially misleading because it omitted critical information concerning American Public's current competitive landscape.

[11] This Court is compelled to highlight an explicit, dispositive statement disclosed by APEI, which the Class Plaintiffs understandably chose to ignore: "As our revenue base grows, we expect our growth rate percentages to continue to decline." Compl. ¶ 69. The Amended Complaint repeatedly attacks APEI's growth rates and categorizes this decline as fraud; however, APEI, by issuing this statement, acknowledges its inability to maintain growth rate 779 percentages inherent of large, established corporations.

The remaining reasons proffered above belabor the common theme that APEI failed to disclose a fundamental change in its competitive landscape as a result of its competitors shifting their focus from civilian to military students in an attempt to comply with the 90–10 Rule. While this is certainly a regulation to which all such for-profit educational institutions must stay abreast, the Amended Complaint fails to allege facts sufficient to support the Class Plaintiffs' claims that APEI's statements —or omissions—were misleading in this regard. See Teachers', 477 F.3d at 173. This theory fails for three reasons: First, at the relevant time the above statements were made, APEI was meeting its guidance. Second, it would seem inapposite to suggest a fundamental change in the competitive landscape of an entire industry would only affect one quarter's earnings. Finally, the Class Plaintiffs repeatedly attribute this alleged change in competitive landscape in the military segment as a necessity for APEI's competitors to comply with the 90–10 regulations. As previously stated, this is certainly something for both companies and investors to keep a close eye on, but more importantly, this Court finds the Amended Complaint devoid of any facts regarding any specific institutions actually in jeopardy of "running afoul of the 90–10 Rule." Perhaps the most compelling fact which belies the Class Plaintiffs' theory regarding the fundamental change in APEI's competitive landscape in the military segment comes from the August 4, 2010, reports from the GAO which for the first time revealed that APEI's competitors had been aggressively targeting military personnel through deceptive recruiting practices. The GAO did not disclose the extent to which these deceptive recruitment activities were successful; however, it shows that knowledge of the competitive encroachment on the military segment was not revealed until August. Without any such information regarding this fact, this Court cannot find a failure by APEI to disclose the same would somehow be misleading.

In a May 6, 2010, press release APEI stated (Compl. ¶ 76):

Recent Highlights:

> Net course registrations from new students in the first quarter of 2010 increased to approximately 13,300, an increase of approximately 26% over the same period of 2009.
> As of March 31, 2010, a total of approximately 70,600 students were enrolled in American Public University System, a year-over-year increase of 42%.

Full Year 2010 Outlook:

> For fiscal year 2010, American Public Education currently estimates the following:
>
> Net course registrations to increase between 35% and 38% year-over-year
>
> Revenues to increase between 36% and 39% year-over-year
> Net income to increase between 36% and 39% year-over-year

On a May 6, 2010, APEI conference call with investors, media representatives and analysts, the Company reported (Compl. ¶ 77):

> We are pleased with our strong first-quarter results which were ultimately driven by our attention to quality, affordability and student retention, as well as by our focus on creating operational efficiencies. Student enrollment at American Public University System increased 42% year over year to 70,600 780 students as of the end of the first quarter.
> Total net course registration increased 39% and net course registrations from new students increased 26%. These increases in both military and civilian student enrollment are a result of our attractive value proposition for students in the military and civilian sectors, continued improvement in student retention, and an increasing percentage of students returning for a second degree.
> Net course registrations from Title IV students, which we believe is a good proxy for civilian student growth, increased 71 % to 12,800 in the first quarter of 2010. Furthermore, strong growth in Title IV net course registrations, which now represent 20% of total net course registrations, illustrates that our mix shift to an increased civilian population is proceeding as expected. As of March 31, 2010, approximately 36% of APUS students are civilian, 64% are active duty military.

* * *

> Another highlight this quarter is related to the new GI Bill. Net course registrations from new students using veterans' benefits, or VA, increased by more than 100% year over year. Veterans now represent 7% of total net course registrations compared to 4% in the first quarter of 2009. While this corresponds to a small portion of our overall registrations, it illustrates how the new GI Bill is also providing us with a nice tailwind.

In the same May 6 conference call, Wilkins stated (Compl. ¶ 78):

> We are reiterating our expectations for net course registration growth of between 35% and 38%, as well as revenue growth of between 36% and 39% for the full year 2010. We also reiterate our long-term view that net course registrations will increase between 32% and 35% in 2011.
> Moving to slide nine, in closing we enjoyed a strong first-quarter results with slight financial and operational out-performance. And as a result, we're raising our full year EPS growth outlook. To put our results and guidance in perspective, the graph on slide nine illustrates our past success at executing our unique strategy and approach. This year, as in prior years, we expect our expansion to continue and our University's reputation for quality and affordability to grow.

During the same call, in response to the question "What kind of growth [is the Company] expecting or is incorporating in [its] model for this year on military growth," Boston responded (Compl. ¶ 79):

> And as far as guidance for specific military growth for the year, we did not issue that. We do expect to grow but we haven't broken our total growth picture between civilians and military.

In response to another question, Boston stated (Compl. ¶ 80):

> So we think that we're on track on the civilian side to continue pretty high growth rates. At the same time we've always said that once we've reached number one market share in the military, that with that much bigger denominator, it would be tougher to grow. But we do expect to continue to grow and we're seeing continued growth in the military.

When asked in what military branches APEI was seeing the most growth, Boston answered (Compl. ¶ 81):

> I think our growth has been in all of the branches. We haven't seen a major jump like we saw when we got into the Navy distance learning program. But we're—and we've also seen some, a little bit of fallout with the Marines that were deployed to Afghanistan for that push. As you might know, Afghanistan bases for the Marines really don't have broadband 781 connectivity, and also their level of activity in this current deployment is > such that they're kicking down doors and there's really no time for them to study. But while that part, that created a little softness, I think we're continuing to see growth in the other branches.

In regards to the growth in the number of military veteran students, Boston and Wilkins responded (Compl. ¶ 82):

> Wilkins: Yes, our VA is up dramatically. It's actually the fastest—we consider the people getting VA benefits to be civilians. They're not active duty military. And we were up—we didn't give that number out, but we were up—it's our fastest growing segment of our civilian population. We're benefiting greatly from Chapter 33. Actually, more than we anticipated.
> Boston: I think we said it went from 4% to 7%.
> Wilkins: Of our total student population, yes. It's about 100% actual growth in terms of net registrations for VA students.... A lot faster than the rest of the civilians.

Also, on May 6, 2010, APEI filed its interim quarterly financial report on Form 10–Q for the quarter ending March 31, 2010. It stated, in relevant part (Compl. ¶ 85):

> Approximately 53% of the Company's revenues for the three months ended March 31, 2010, were derived from students who received tuition assistance from tuition assistance programs sponsored by the United States Department of Defense compared to approximately 59% of the Company's revenues for the three months ended March 31, 2009. For the three months ended March 31, 2010, 20%, or approximately 12,800, of our net course registrations were from students using financial aid under the Title IV programs compared to 16%, or approximately 7,500, of our net course registrations for the three months ended March 31, 2009. A reduction in either of these programs could have a significant impact on the Company's operations.

> Net course registrations for the three month period ended March 31, 2010 increased 39% from the three month period ended March 31, 2009. Our revenue increased to $47.3 million from $33.2 million, or by 43%, for the three month period ended March 31, 2010 from the three month period ended March 31, 2009. Operating margins increased to 27.8% from 26.3% for the three month period ended March 31, 2010 compared to the three month period ended March 31, 2009.

With regard to the above statements referenced in ¶¶ 76–85, the Class Plaintiffs allege each were materially false and misleading when made for the reasons set forth in ¶ 71, and the factual detail contained throughout the Amended Complaint. Additionally, the plaintiffs allege these same statements were materially false and misleading when made because they represented and/or omitted adverse facts which then existed and disclosure of which was necessary to make the statements not false and/or misleading. Class Plaintiffs allege the true facts, which were allegedly known to or recklessly disregarded by the defendants were:

1. Defendants lacked a reasonable basis for reiterating the Company's 2010 guidance related to revenue growth and new course registration growth. Defendants were fully aware that the competitive landscape in the military for-profit education segment had dramatically shifted, and that increased competition would result in a substantial slowdown in net course registrations for the Company.

782 2. For the same reason, defendants lacked a reasonable basis for raising the Company's full-year earnings per share outlook, which further misled the market.

3. By pointing to "continued growth in the military," defendants omitted the material fact that its "number one market share in the military" was being eroded by its competition. Rather than come clean with the market, defendants pointed to supposed growth in "all of the branches."

4. The decrease in the percentage of the Company's revenues earned from DOD tuition assistance programs was not the mere logical expansion of the Company's foray into the civilian market. Quite the opposite, it was the consequence of the Company's increasing loss of military market share stemming from a demonstrably changed competitive environment.

[12] Again, the Class Plaintiffs rely on the theme that APEI failed to disclose a fundamental change in its competitive landscape as a result of its competitors shifting their focus from the civilian to military market in an attempt to comply with the 90–10 Rule. Again, this Court finds that at the relevant time the above statements were made, APEI was meeting its guidance. Simply put, the numbers were there to support the statements. Further, this Court is not compelled that a fundamental change in the competitive landscape of an entire industry would only affect one quarter's earnings. As the defendants point out, APEI experienced a significant dip in the third quarter of 2010, but fully rebounded the following quarter. Finally, as previously noted, this Court finds the Amended Complaint devoid of any concrete facts showing some industry-wide problem that these for-profit institutions were actually in jeopardy of "running afoul of the 90–10 Rule." Without any such information, this Court cannot find a failure to disclose the same would somehow be misleading.

On May 14, 2010, APEI disclosed its Annual Report, including a letter from Boston, which stated, in part (Compl. ¶ 90):

> From every perspective, we are building a sustainable institution. Our emphasis on learning, quality, and customer service translates into academic success for our students. And our outreach effort, high referral rates, and commitment to affordability translate into high enrollment rates and strong growth. In 2009, enrollments increased 41 percent over the prior year. For the year, we achieved significant revenue and earnings growth. Revenues of $149.0 million in 2009 were up 39 percent form the prior year, and our operating income of $39.9 million represents a 55 percent increase over 2008 levels.
> Our future is bright. With an enrollment of more than 60,000 students, we are the leading provider of higher education to the military and we continue to expand among civilian students.

The above statement seems to stand alone in the Complaint without any explanation as to whether the Class Plaintiffs believe it to be misleading. Without any reasons or facts in support, and upon an independent review of the same, this Court fails to see any misleading statements or omissions.

Then, after the market closed on August 5, 2010, APEI issued its second quarter 2010, earnings results, downgrading its earnings guidance for the third quarter and withdrawing its guidance for the rest of year 2010. The press release stated, in part (Compl. ¶ 93):

> American Public Education has recently observed adverse changes in our historical pattern of growth in net course registrations from active duty military students at AMU. While the Company cannot determine all of the factors that are causing it to occur, American Public *783 Education believes the changes in net course registrations from active duty military students may in part be due to increased operations activity and recent deployments across all branches of the U.S. Military, particularly the United States Marine Corps. The Company believes that increased demands on many active duty military personnel, combined with limited internet access associated with some deployments in Afghanistan and at sea, are likely to limit the ability of certain active duty military students to pursue higher education in the near term. The Company cannot determine whether net course registrations from active duty military students will return to previous expectations, grow more slowly than expected, remain flat or decline.
> As a result, American Public University Systems plans to accelerate its existing strategic plan to address civilian markets through APU, with an emphasis on public service professionals and selected groups of working adults.
> American Public Education is revising guidance for the third quarter of 2010 and is returning to its prior practice of only providing guidance for current periods. Guidance given previously for 2010 and beyond should no longer be relied upon. American Public Education anticipates third quarter 2010 net course registrations to increase between 20% and 22%, revenue to increase between 29% and 31 %, and net income to increase between 5% and 10% over the prior year period.

Also on August 5, 2010, APEI hosted a conference call during which the plaintiffs allege numerous false and misleading statements were made (Compl. ¶ 94):

> Moving to slide four, Advancing Our Current Strategic Plan, these developments illustrate our success at fulfilling our institutional mission in that our strategic plans are highly effective. We have begun to accelerate existing plans that address civilian markets because we have recently observed changes in the historical pattern of growth in our net course registrations from active duty military students. This began in mid-June 2010 with a slowing in the growth of net course registrations from active duty military, and we cannot be certain whether net course registrations from active duty military students will return to previous expectations, little more slowly than expected remain flat or decline.

We believe that the change in net course registrations from active duty military students is largely due to the increased operations tempo and recent overseas deployments across all branches of the U.S. military, particularly the level of activity in United States Marine Corps.

We suspect that increased demand on many active duty military personnel combined with limited Internet access associated with some deployments is likely to limit the ability of certain active duty military students to pursue higher education in the near term. Our students are heroes and professionals with very serious jobs that are becoming more difficult as military activity increases and as world events dictate. Over 94,000 troops are currently involved in intense mountain warfare and warfare preparations in Afghanistan according to estimates from the Department of Defense. Several components of major Army divisions are presently transitioning to and from Iraq and Afghanistan as part of the military's plan for the Afghanistan surge. July was the deadliest month for U.S. troops in the nearly nine-year Afghan war. Troop levels in Afghanistan are expected to raise, while troop levels in Iraq are expected to decline from approximately 784 92,000 troops. In total, over 290,000 troops are deployed in the Greater Middle East wars, including the Air Force, which is focused on supplying the troops and supporting the transitions.

In addition, several thousands of sailors and marines recently participated in joint military drills near South Korea and another 20,000 sailors and marines are currently involved in RIMPAC, which is the rim of the Pacific international war games, the world's largest maritime exercise, involving 25 Navy ships, submarines, and 14 other nations off the coast of Hawaii.

In the Marine Corps, where AMU has a substantial leadership position, several battalions are in transition or on drills, including deployments to the Horn of Africa. The Coast Guard and many civilians with expertise in emergency and environmental matters are also our students, are also deployed and focused on the Gulf oil spill disaster cleanup and recovery.

Despite what we believe are temporary operational factors softening active duty military participation, we continue to strengthen our brand in the military. However, we cannot fully estimate the extent to which the growth of our net course registrations will be impacted by military activity and we do not know all of the factors that are causing it to occur.

Turning now to regulatory matters. As an institution of higher learning committed to academic excellence and expanding access to higher education, we support broad and collaborative efforts to improve student outcomes and further the success of our higher education system. While the Department of Education's proposed rules regarding gainful employment contain numerous complexities, our current survey review with the proposed rules and available data leads us to believe that American Public University System will be in compliance with the 8% debt-to-income thresholds.

However, uncertainties still exist regarding the proposed rules and our ability to comply with final rules. While approximately 90% of our students are currently employed, we do not currently track the personal income and median debt loads of all of our APUS students. As a recommended change to the proposed rules, we suggest online institutions be permitted to limit Title IV distributions to direct cost, tuition fees and books.

In closing, while we work through temporary challenges with enrollment of active duty military students, we will accelerate our successful improvement strategies for attracting civilians. Our unique approach and business model are highly effective and we hope to return to higher overall growth rates when military deployments and activity settles and as our civilian student population scales to be the primary driver of our growth rate.

In the above statements, APEI discloses newly-discovered information adversely affecting its growth in net course registrations from active duty military students at AMU. While APEI does not purport to know the exact cause of this shift, it provides numerous examples of the more plausible cause; that is, increased military deployments. These are all simply market risks which are clearly beyond APEI's control. At no time, however, does it give any credence to the Class Plaintiff's theory regarding a changing competitive landscape in response to the 90–10 Rule. Further, APEI responsibly acknowledges that it cannot predict when these military personnel will return. Therefore, it withdrew any future guidance. Additionally, APEI 785 noted that it would have to adapt by accelerating its existing strategic plan to grow its civilian segment through its APU.

Wilkins then stated (Compl. ¶ 95):

> If you move to slide seven, which shows our Third Quarter Outlook. As Wally indicated previously, we have recently observed that the growth of our net course registrations from active duty military student has slowed more than we expected. We believe that this may be due to increased operations, military activity and recent overseas deployments. Thus we expect slower growth in net course registrations in revenue.
>
> As illustrated on slide seven, we expect net course registrations to grow between 20% and 22% in the third quarter of 2010. Revenues are anticipated to increase between 29% and 31 % during the quarter, driven primarily by the increase in overall net course registrations and the timing of the starts in June.
>
> Net course registration growth from active duty military students declined to approximately a flat percentage year-over-year in July, and similarly in August. As the growth of active duty military students continued as previously expected, our overall outlook for net course registration growth and revenues would have remained unchanged or in the mid–30s for the full year.
> As a result of the adverse changes in the pattern of growth in active duty military registrations, we have been increasing our marketing spend to increase civilian registrations at a faster rate than we had originally planned. At the same time, we expect our faculty expenses and student support cost to increase in preparation for the possibility of expanded future enrollment related to the Walmart partnership.

Importantly, in the question and answer session during the August 5, 2010, conference call, when the question was posed why the defendants believed that "this deployment is the cause for the surprise and not a loss of market share, increased competition that folks have been speculating about for some time," Boston responded (Compl. ¶ 96):

> Well, thanks, Trace. I think, as you might know, we did quite a bit of analysis. We track our enrollments by military base and we look at the changes in those enrollments up and down. And when you look at where we have seen decreased enrollments in the last month and where we forecast decreased enrollments for the third quarter, it's at bases where a substantial portion of the force has been deployed.
> So, for example, in the Marine Corps, Camp Lejeune and the base on the West Coast, which I'll think of in a second, are the two largest Marine Corps bases and both of those bases are, as some of the local merchants tell us, almost like ghost towns with the marines in Afghanistan for this current surge.
>
> So the Marine Corps is where we have our largest market share as a percentage of their students were studying in higher ed and we have their two largest bases, which are currently very actively deployed. But we've looked around and we've checked other sources that services only publish their enrollment data on an annual basis, but from some unofficial conversations, we don't believe that this particular situation is limited to us. In our particular situation, since we're number one with the largest market share and the only public company reporting that data, the one you see might be another guess, if you could obtain data from them that we believe that this is entirely due to the most deployment not just Afghanistan, Iraq where if you take the March 25 article in the Washington 786 Post, the number of forces combined in Afghanistan or Iraq now exceed the maximum during the peak of the Iraq war, as well as we have soldiers in Kuwait who are taking down equipment and either refurbishing it for shipment to Afghanistan or shipment elsewhere.
> And then we have the small matter with the two naval exercises, one off the coast of South Korea, which is due to the simmering situation with North Korea and then the other one, which was a regularly scheduled multi-nation exercise. But in both of those cases with the naval forces, when they're out of sea they don't > communicate, they maintain radio silence and their Internet connections are very limited. So all in all, it's sort of a conflagration of a number of events. And we think it's temporary, we just can't predict when it might recover.

[13] This Court finds two statements which are not only not misleading, but represent the most tangible facts to support one of the opposing theories. This Court finds the statements support APEI's inference that increased deployments caused the decline in military course registrations. First, Boston states that the two largest Marine Corps bases in the country are like ghost towns due to deployments. This fact indisputably supports APEI's inference that these military deployments are a substantial cause of the decline in net course registrations at AMU. The second statement is contained in the proceeding paragraph.

During the same August 5 call, an analyst questioned as to "when you found out about the slowdown in the military side of your growth" (Compl. ¶ 97):

> Arvind Bhatia, Sterne Agee: At that point, I guess, as you started to reevaluate your growth, was there discussion internally to communicate the change at that point to the Street or were you seeing some signs that things could get better? What I'm trying to understand is, has there been further deterioration since June or things have been kind of flattish after that?
> Boston: I think that one of the things that's different about our military students and our civilian students all along is that our civilian students will register about 45 days out because of the intricacies of getting the FSA approved, whereas our military students will see a heavy enrollment typically in the last two to three weeks before semester starts really based on their assignments.
> And so we were well into June or we were past the drops for the month of June when we were looking at July registrations and realizing that we weren't seeing a typical last-minute influx of students for July both returning and new, and we're now into August and we didn't see much for August either. So that's why we gave this guidance and we obviously did a bunch of research into which bases were impacted and what the ops' tempo were at those bases and it's going to be tough to predict. I mean the President says that the troops will be out of Iraq by August 31. Who knows what that means and who knows if that is—if that can be accomplished.

Boston credibly explains the difficulties of predicting military enrollment when he states: "our military students will see a heavy enrollment typically in the last two to three weeks before semester starts really based on their assignments." Thus, this highly unpredictable military segment has an inherent risk that enrollments could decline significantly at any time, and with little notice. This Court does not find that this should preclude APEI from making projections for that reason. Rather, what APEI did was base future projections on 787 its historical growth and monitor and report any changes thereto. This Court, therefore does not find such statements to that effect to be misleading or fraudulent.

In conclusion, in ascertaining whether the Complaint has stated sufficient facts to permit a reasonable person to find that the Class Plaintiffs have satisfied the element that the defendants made false or misleading statements, this Court finds the Complaint falls short. See Teachers', 477 F.3d at 173.

2. Scienter

I.

[14] The PSLRA imposes a number of requirements designed to discourage private securities actions lacking merit. Among them is the requirement that in a private securities action "in which the plaintiff may recover money damages only on proof that the defendant acted with a particular state of mind, the complaint shall, with respect to each act or omission alleged to violate this chapter, state with particularity facts giving rise to a strong inference that the defendant acted with the required state of mind." 15 U.S.C § 78u–4(b)(2) (emphasis added). Complaints that do not adequately plead scienter are to be dismissed. Id. at § 78u–4(b)(3)(A). "And if the defendant is a corporation, the plaintiff must allege facts that support a strong inference of scienter with respect to at least one authorized agent of the corporation, since corporate liability derives from the actions of its agents. See Tellabs, Inc., 437 F.3d at 602–03; Southland Sec. Corp. v. INSpire Ins. Solutions, Inc., 365 F.3d 353, 363–67 (5th Cir.2004)." Teachers' Ret., 477 F.3d 162, 184.

The PSLRA does not define what constitutes "a strong inference;" however, the Supreme Court has provided guidance. See Tellabs, Inc., 437 F.3d 588, 601 (listing approaches of different circuits), vacated and remanded, 551 U.S. 308, 127 S.Ct. 2499, 168 L.Ed.2d 179. In Tellabs, the Court prescribed the following analysis for Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss § 10(b) actions:

> First, ... courts must, as with any motion to dismiss for failure to plead a claim on which relief can be granted, accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true ...
> Second, courts must consider the complaint in its entirety, as well as other sources courts ordinarily examine when ruling on Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss.... The inquiry, as several Courts of Appeals have recognized, is whether all of the facts alleged, taken collectively, give rise to a strong inference of scienter, not whether any individual allegation, scrutinized in isolation, meets that standard.
>
> Third, in determining whether the pleaded facts give rise to a "strong" inference of scienter, the court must take into account plausible opposing inferences.... The strength of an inference cannot be decided in a vacuum. The inquiry is inherently comparative: How likely is it that one conclusion, as compared to others, follows from the underlying facts?.... [T]he inference of scienter must be more than merely "reasonable" or "permissible"—it must be cogent and compelling, thus strong in light of other explanations. A complaint will survive, we hold, only if a reasonable person would deem the inference of scienter cogent and at least as compelling as any opposing inference one could draw from the facts alleged.

Tellabs, 551 U.S. at 322–325, 127 S.Ct. 2499 (emphasis added).

This Court has conducted a complete analysis of all alleged statements and inferences that can be drawn from the Amended Complaint and the parties' briefs 788 and finds that, "tak[ing] into account plausible opposing inferences ... a reasonable person would deem the [Class Plaintiffs'] inference of scienter [is not] cogent and at least as compelling as the opposing inference one could draw from [the] facts alleged." Id. Rather, the Class Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint lacks "a strong inference that the defendant acted with the required state of mind" as proscribed by 15 U.S.C. § 78u–4(b)(2), and as construed by the United States Supreme Court. Id. Specifically, this Court finds that the defendants' opposing inference is more compelling than that offered by the Class Plaintiffs.

A. The Class Plaintiffs' Inference

Here, the Class Plaintiffs' theory turns on its position that APEI misled the market regarding its military market share. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that competitors began recognizing the opportunity to avoid violating the 90–10 Rule afforded them by active-duty military personnel and veteran students—as well as the increased funding made available by the Post–9/11 GI Bill. Thus, APEI's for-profit competitors began aggressively pursuing military and veteran students prior to and during the Class Period in an effort to bolster the 10% side of the 90–10 calculus. Id. at ¶ 51. As a result, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants were aware of, or deliberately disregarded, that APEI's market-leading position in the military for-profit education segment was under fire during the Class Period. Id. at ¶ 52. The result, plaintiffs allege, was that rising competition for military students dragged down APEI's ability to grow military course registrations.

To that end, while the rate of growth for APEI's total military educational benefits received decreased every year, the vast majority of its competitors increased, especially during 2009 and 2010, when the increases were frequently by several hundred, or even several thousand, percent. Id. at ¶ 57. APEI realized only a 15% increase in DOD benefits received in 2010, compared to 2009, which was down from a 31% gain in 2009, and a 53% increase in 2008. Id. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants were keenly aware that the decline of APEI's military-based enrollment was not merely a future potential risk, but was an actual, present reality.

The alleged misleading statements first began on February 22, 2010, when "APEI touted its status as the largest provider of higher education to active duty military recruits, without disclosing changes to the competitive landscape and that its financials and future business prospects were not sustainable." Id. at ¶¶ 62–63. Class Plaintiffs allege that despite the problems impacting APEI's business, defendants assured the market that APEI would continue to grow. APEI also provided outlook for the year 2010, which included a 35–38% increase in net course registrations year-over-year and estimated that net course registrations would increase 32–35% for 2011. Id.

at ¶ 62. APEI also reassured the market that APEI stayed informed of any significant military deployments and built deployments into its guidance. Id. at ¶ 64. Similarly, on May 6, 2010, APEI reiterated its 2010 guidance for revenue growth and net course registrations and increased its net income guidance to between 36% and 39% year-over-year. Id. at ¶ 76.

Three months later, on August 5, 2010, APEI downgraded its revenue and earnings guidance for the third quarter of 2010, and withdrew its guidance for year 2010. Id. at ¶ 93. APEI revealed "adverse changes" in net course registrations of its active duty military students at AMU as a result of increased deployments and announced plans to increase APEI's focus on the civilian market, rather than the military market. Id. at ¶ 94. In response to 789 this news, the price of APEI stock significantly decreased by 32%. Id. at ¶ 104.

Indeed, APEI even asserted that it was gaining "actual share inside the military" and experiencing "continued expansion." Id. at ¶¶ 65–66. Despite this alleged attack on its market share, APEI specifically addressed the issue, stating: "there has been no change in the competitive environment within the military segment despite concerns that other for-profits would step up their efforts in this market to thwart the 90–10 issues." Id. at ¶¶ 11, 73.

B. The Defendants' Inference

Defendants assert that increased competition was not the cause of the declining enrollments. Rather, they contend their withdrawal of the previous guidance was a result of unforseen, temporary market factors, which upon discovery, were timely disclosed. Such factors included increased overseas military deployments and the increased Government probes, which indeed, affected the entire for-profit education sector. The defendants point out that their company continues to grow and, with the exception of one quarter, has met its projections. These facts have led the defendants to pose an interesting question which tends to undermine the plaintiffs' inference: If APEI's market share was adversely impacted by increased competition for one quarter, what explanation can the Class Plaintiffs offer regarding the subsequent lack of adverse impact in each quarter to follow? This Court finds no compelling explanation.

The more compelling rationale posed by the defendants includes the assertion that they had built into their projections the possibility of increased deployments and withdrew their third quarter guidance as a result. To rebut the Class Plaintiffs' inference that the defendants "must have known" the statements issued regarding its competition were misleading, APEI contends the same is inadequate to withstand the heightened pleading requirements required by the PLSRA. Specifically, APEI argues that the Class Plaintiffs ask this Court to draw the inference that APEI knew that this alleged increase in competition had fundamentally altered APEI's competitive advantage, yet chose to remain silent. The fact remains that APEI continued to meet its guidance when these statements were made. Further, APEI cogently argues that the plaintiffs contradict their inference by asking this Court to draw the above inference despite the fact that: (1) APEI saw declining enrollments in a single quarter; (2) APEI thereafter met its projections, causing its stock price to rebound; and (3) APEI derived no benefit from any alleged fraud. Specifically, APEI stated:

> American Public Education has recently observed adverse changes in our historical pattern of growth in net course registrations from active duty military students at AMU. While the Company cannot determine all of the factors that are causing it to occur, American Public Education believes the changes in net course registrations from active duty military students may in part be due to increased operations activity and recent deployments across all branches of the U.S. Military, particularly the United States Marine Corps. The Company believes that increased demands on many active duty military personnel, combined with limited internet access associated with some deployments in Afghanistan and at sea, are likely to limit the ability of certain active duty military students to pursue higher education in the near term. The Company cannot determine whether net course registrations from active duty military students will return to previous 790 expectations, grow more slowly than expected, remain flat or decline.
> As a result, American Public University Systems plans to accelerate its existing strategic plan to address civilian markets through APU, with an emphasis on public service professionals and selected groups of working adults.

In reality, APEI argues, it did disclose to the market a decline in enrollments as a result of temporary factors including increased deployments and, upon these discoveries, it immediately withdrew its previous guidance. After the storm passed, APEI's business essentially emerged unscathed. It is, thus, the inference of APEI's non-fraudulent intent overwhelmingly outweighs the inference of fraudulent intent offered by the Class Plaintiffs. Accordingly, APEI seeks dismissal on the ground that the Class Plaintiffs have not adequately alleged scienter. APEI asserts the above is more consistent with an unforeseeable, temporary change in market demand rather than a fundamental adverse change in its overall competitive landscape. Essentially, the defendants argue that the Class Plaintiffs are "complaining only about market risks, not particularized securities fraud." Teachers' Ret., 477 F.3d at 168.

C. Court's Comparison of the Parties' Opposing Inferences

[15] [16] The Supreme Court has provided guidance in determining whether the pleaded facts give rise to a "strong" inference of scienter. Simply put, "the court must take into account plausible opposing inferences.... The strength of an inference cannot be decided in a vacuum. The inquiry is inherently comparative: How likely is it that one conclusion, as compared to others, follows from the underlying facts?.... [T]he inference of scienter must be more than merely 'reasonable' or 'permissible'—it must be cogent and compelling, thus strong in light of other explanations. A complaint will survive ... only if a reasonable person would deem the inference of scienter cogent and at least as compelling as any opposing inference one could draw from the facts alleged." Tellabs, 551 U.S. at 322–325, 127 S.Ct. 2499 (emphasis added). In addition, "[i]n making this determination, the court must review 'all the allegations holistically.' " Matrixx Initiatives, Inc. v. Siracusano, —— U.S. ——, 131 S.Ct. 1309, 1324, 179 L.Ed.2d 398 (2011) (quoting Tellabs, 551 U.S. at 326, 127 S.Ct. 2499).

[17] Importantly, this Court finds the Amended Complaint devoid of any facts regarding any specific institutions actually in jeopardy of "running afoul of the 90–10 Rule." This Court reiterates that perhaps the most compelling fact which belies the Class Plaintiffs' inference regarding the fundamental change in APEI's competitive landscape in the military segment comes from the August 4, 2010, reports from the GAO which for the first time revealed that APEI's competitors had been aggressively targeting military personnel through deceptive recruiting practices. The GAO did not disclose the extent to which these deceptive recruitment activities were successful; however, it shows that knowledge of the competitive encroachment on the military segment was not revealed until August. Thus, this Court finds the defendants' inference more compelling than the Class Plaintiffs'.

II.

[18] [19] In addition, other facts stated in the Amended Complaint are too circumstantial to give rise to a "strong inference that the defendants acted with scienter. The [Amended] Complaint suggests that the defendants artificially inflated [APEI's] share price in order to profit from personal sales of [its] stock. But insider trading can imply scienter only if 791 the timing and amount of a defendant's trading were 'unusual or suspicious.' " Teachers' Ret., 477 F.3d at 184. This Court has reviewed the timing of the trades and finds that the Amended Complaint falls far short of showing that the trades were made at a time consistent with knowing or reckless fraud. Rather, these sales follow a rather simple pattern based on the date and number of shares sold. For Boston, it appears his plan essentially set sales to occur on the 15th of the month, unless it fell on a weekend, in which case the sale was made the next business day. Compl. at ¶ 110. For Wilkins, trades were made bi-monthly in the amounts of 500 or 2,000 shares.

Finally, the Amended Complaint does not allege that the defendants timed their sales to profit from any particular disclosure; rather the defendants' sales were made pursuant to previously established 10b5–1 trading plans. Additionally, the Amended Complaint does not provide defendants' trading patterns outside the class period to permit comparison with their trades within the class period. See Teachers' Ret. at 185.

3. Class Plaintiffs' Claims Fall Short of Establishing a Causal Link Between the Alleged Fraud and the Claimed Loss

[20] [21] [22] [23] [24] [25] Claims for securities fraud under § 10b and 10b–5 require that the Class Plaintiffs must "allege a sufficiently direct relationship between the plaintiffs['] economic loss[—in this case, the diminution of the value of the stock shares—]and the defendants['] fraudulent conduct." Dura Pharm., Inc. v.

Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 346–47, 125 S.Ct. 1627, 161 L.Ed.2d 577 (2005). In the Fourth Circuit, the Court "review[s] allegations of loss causation for 'sufficient specificity,' a standard largely consonant with Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s requirement that averments of fraud be pled with particularity.[3] The degree of specificity demanded is that which will enable the court to evaluate whether the necessary causal link exists." See Katyle v. Penn Nat. Gaming, Inc., 637 F.3d 462, 471 (4th Cir.2011). Accordingly, where "the connection is not attenuated, a fraud claim will not lie." Dura Pharm., 544 U.S. at 337, 125 S.Ct. 1627 (citing Miller v. Asensio & Co., 364 F.3d 223, 232 (4th Cir.2004)). And, mere "[s]peculation and conjecture, even a well-educated guess, in the context of market prognostication does not suffice to establish a fact" that adequately supports a plaintiff's loss causation allegation. Id. at 477. In addition, in any private action arising under the PSLRA, "the plaintiff[s] shall have the burden of proving that the act or omission of the defendant[s] alleged caused the loss for which the plaintiff[s] seek to recover damages." Teachers' at 185. Further, "because the PSLRA explicitly requires that the plaintiff[s] prove loss causation, the general rules of pleading require that the plaintiff [s] also plead it in [their] complaint." Id. (citing Dura Pharm., 544 U.S. at 346, 125 S.Ct. 1627). The Fourth Circuit Teachers' case continues:

> Neither the PSLRA nor the Supreme Court has established whether loss causation is a sufficient part of an "averment of fraud" to fall within the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). A strong case can be made that because loss causation is among the "circumstances constituting fraud for which Rule 9(b) demands particularity, loss causation should be 792 pleaded with particularity." See Dura Pharm., 544 U.S. at 343–44, 125 S.Ct. 1627 (comparing § 78u–4(b)(4) to a common law action for deceit which requires that a plaintiff "show not only that he had known the truth he would not have acted but also that he suffered actual economic loss"); Miller v. Asensio & Co., Inc., 364 F.3d 223, 231–32 (4th Cir.2004) (explaining loss causation to require a showing that "defendant's misrepresentation was a substantial cause of the loss by showing 'a direct or proximate relationship between the loss and the misrepresentation.' " (quoting Gasner v. Bd. of Supervisors, 103 F.3d 351, 360 (4th Cir.1996))). Moreover, the Supreme Court has not ruled out a holding that Rule 9(b) governs a pleading of loss causation. See Dura Pharm., 544 U.S. at 346, 125 S.Ct. 1627.
> Even in the absence of an explicit holding, the Dura Pharmaceuticals Court concluded that a plaintiff does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted—even under the relaxed pleading requirements of Rule 8(a)—by simply alleging that the plaintiff purchased defendant's stock at an "artificially inflated purchase price" and thereby sustained damages. Id. at 347, 125 S.Ct. 1627. The Court required something more, stating:
>
> We concede that ordinary pleading rules are not meant to impose a great burden upon a plaintiff. But it should not prove burdensome for a plaintiff who has suffered an economic loss to provide a defendant with some indication of the loss and the causal connection that the plaintiff has in mind. At the same time, allowing a plaintiff to forgo giving any indication of the economic loss and proximate cause that the plaintiff has in mind would bring about the harm of the very sort that the [PSLRA] seek[s] to avoid. Id. at 347, 125 S.Ct. 1627 (citations omitted). A failure to recognize that loss causation be specifically alleged and demonstrated by the allegations of the complaint would permit a plaintiff with a largely groundless claim to simply take up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value, rather than a reasonably founded hope that the discovery process will reveal relevant evidence. Such a rule would tend to transform a private securities action into a partial downside insurance policy. Id. at 347–48, 125 S.Ct. 1627 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).
> Accordingly, we conclude that a plaintiff purporting to allege a securities fraud claim must not only prove loss causation—that the material misrepresentations or omissions alleged actually caused the loss for which the plaintiff seeks damages—but he must also plead it with sufficient specificity to enable the court to evaluate whether the necessary causal link exists. See Lentell v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 396 F.3d 161, 172 (2d Cir.2005).

Teachers', 477 F.3d at 185–186.

[26] "To allege loss causation in this case, plaintiffs would have to allege that the market reacted to new facts disclosed [on August 5] that revealed [APEI's] previous representations to have been fraudulent." Id. at 187. In this case, the Class Plaintiffs allege the discovery by the market of increased competition in the military education market caused APEI's stock price to decline. Plaintiffs' theory rests on the defendants' alleged concealment of this fact, which APEI has neither admitted, nor has it ever released any corrective disclosure relating to this fact. Simply, the Class Plaintiffs speculate that the defendants concealed information regarding increased competition which caused APEI to miss its earnings projections, thereby 793 causing the plaintiffs' economic loss. Because no such disclosure occurred, the drop in APEI's share price on August 6, 2010, more logically occurred because APEI released adverse information regarding a decline in military enrollments due to increased military deployments. See Id. at 187–88. "That loss, however, is not one for which the plaintiffs in this case are entitled to compensation." Id.

To drive this point home, the Teachers' Court concludes its opinion with an "epilogue," wherein it states that "it appears that the market reached the same conclusion regarding plaintiffs' allegations. The record shows that although [the defendant's] share price dropped ... the price recovered quickly," returning nearly to its previous level. This is precisely what happened in this case. After a one-quarter dip in APEI's stock price in the third quarter upon the news of the deployments, the share price rebounded and remains strong to this day.

B. Section 20(a) Controlling Person Liability

[27] [28] Section 20(a) of the Exchange Act provides for liability for "controlling persons." 15 U.S.C. § 78t. However, "controlling person liability is premised on an independent violation of the federal securities laws." In re Merck & Co., Inc. Secs. Litig., 432 F.3d 261, 275 (3d Cir.2005) (citations omitted). Because the plaintiffs have failed to show an independent violation of the federal securities laws, they likewise cannot maintain a claim for controlling person liability. Accordingly, Count II must also be DISMISSED.

C. Dismissal With Prejudice is Appropriate in this Case

[29] [30] Finally, the Class Plaintiffs request leave to amend the Amended Complaint in the event of dismissal. To grant leave to amend "until [plaintiffs] get it right" would be contrary to the purpose of the PSLRA's "high standard of pleading," the purpose of which is to "provide a filter at the earliest stage to screen out lawsuits that have no factual basis...." Smith v. Circuit City Stores, 286 F.Supp.2d 707, 722 (E.D.Va.2003). Indeed, 15 U.S.C. § 78u–4(b)(3) states that "the court shall, on the motion of any defendant, dismiss the complaint if the [pleading] requirements are not met." The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in GSC Partners CDO Fund v. Washington, 368 F.3d 228 (3d Cir.2004), held that when a "stark absence of any suggestion by the plaintiffs that they have developed facts since the action was commenced which would, if true, cure the defects in the pleadings under the heightened requirements of the PSLRA," a complaint should be dismissed with prejudice. This Court has already given the Class Plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint once. Further "amendment would be futile in light of the fundamental deficiencies in [the] plaintiffs' theory of liability...." Cozzarelli v. Inspire Pharms., Inc., 549 F.3d 618, 630–631 (4th Cir.2008).

V. Conclusion

Therefore, based on the reasons stated above, this Court is of the opinion that the Motion to Dismiss by Defendants American Public Education, Inc., Wallace E. Boston, Jr., and Harry T. Wilkins [Doc. 59] should be, and the same is, hereby GRANTED. Accordingly, this matter is hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE and ORDERED STRICKEN from the active docket of this Court. The Clerk is further DIRECTED to enter a separate judgment in favor of the defendants.

It is so ORDERED.

Footnotes

1 The plaintiffs' original Complaint [Doc. 1] alleged a completely different theory based in fraud. The basis of that Complaint asserted that the statements in the February 22, 2010, 10–K filing were materially false and misleading not because they failed to disclose an alleged fundamental change in competitive landscape (as the Amended Complaint alleges), but rather because (1) APEI had "propped up [its] results by fraudulently inducing students to enroll in [its] ... programs and engaged in other manipulative recruiting tactics;" (2) "[APEI] had materially overstated the company's growth prospects by failing to properly disclose that [it] had engaged in illicit and improper recruiting activities, which also had the effect of artificially inflating [its] reported results and future growth prospects;" and (3) "[t]hroughout the Class Period, it was also not true that APEI had adequate systems of internal operational or financial controls, such that APEI's reported operational statements and foreseeable growth prospects were true, accurate, or reliable;" and (4) "[a]s a result of the[se] ... adverse conditions which defendants failed to disclose, throughout the Class Period, defendants lacked any reasonable basis to claim that APEI was operating according to plan, or that [it] could achieve guidance sponsored and/or endorsed by defendants." These claims have since been abandoned.

2 This Court recognizes these figures represent percentage increases, which figures can easily be manipulated to inflate perception of actual growth based on, for instance, actual dollar figures. For example, an increase of 2000%—while appearing impressive—could represent a dollar increase from $100 to only $2,000. Thus, it is inherent that companies entering new segments (if successful) will experience high percentage growth.

3 The heightened pleading standards of the PLSRA do not carry over to causation. "Congress only addressed misrepresentations and scienter in § 78u–4(b)." Teachers' Ret., 477 F.3d at 172. As such, the other elements of a securities fraud claim are analyzed under the traditional pleading scheme of Rules 8 and 9.

Scienter

PSLRA requires plaintiffs to state with particularity both the facts constituting the alleged violation, and the facts evidencing scienter. Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995, § 101(b), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78u–4.

Misrepresentation

To survive a motion to dismiss, under PSLRA a securities fraud complaint must point to contemporaneous reports, witness statements, or any other information that had actually been provided to defendants at the time they were alleged to have misrepresented material facts. Manipulative, Deceptive or Fraudulent Conduct

At the pleading stage, a plaintiff asserting liability under Section 10(b) and/or Rule 10b–5 must satisfactorily allege (1) a material misrepresentation or omission by the defendant; (2) scienter; (3) a connection between the misrepresentation or omission and the purchase or sale of a security; (4) reliance upon the misrepresentation or omission; (5) economic loss; and (6) loss causation. Securities Regulation

Misrepresentation or omission is "material," as required to support claim of securities fraud, if there is a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the total mix of information made available. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 10(b), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78j(b); 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b–5(b).

Securities Regulation
Materiality of violation

A misrepresentation or omission is immaterial, and thus does not support a claim of securities fraud, where a reasonable investor could not have been swayed by the misrepresentation. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 10(b), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78j(b); 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b–5(b).

[6] Securities Regulation
Materiality of violation

Soft, puffing statements generally lack materiality, as required to support a claim of securities fraud, because the market price of a share is not inflated by vague statements predicting growth; no reasonable investor would rely on these statements, and they are certainly not specific enough to perpetrate a fraud on the market. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 10(b), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78j(b); 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b–5(b).

Misrepresentation

With respect to pleading falsity, the PSLRA's heightened pleading requirements compel the plaintiff to plead the "who, what, when, where and how" of the misleading statements or omissions. Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995, § 101(b), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78u–4.
